B.F. Goodrich Tubeless Tire

IS THE ANSWER TO ALL 3 TIRE HAZARDS!

1. SKIDS: WIPES DRY PATH OADS!

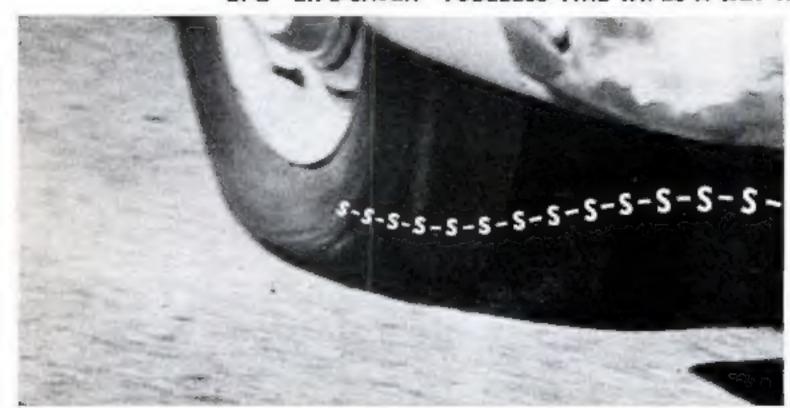

The BFG "Life-Saver" Tubeless Tire has a new kind of tread with over 10,000 tiny "grip-blocks" that wipe a wet road so dry you can light a match on it.

To show its stopping ability, two identical cars, one with regular tires, the other with BFG "Life-Savers", traveling on rain-swept blacktop at 30 mph, locked brakes simultaneously. At this normal city driving speed, the "Life-Saver" Tubeless Tires stopped one full car-length sooner than ordinary tires—a stopping distance which could easily be the difference between a safe stop and a smash-up.

"Life-Savers" get you started up to 40% faster than regular tires. And outwear them by 10 to 15%, which can mean many added miles. Yet they cost less than an ordinary tire and safety-type tube.

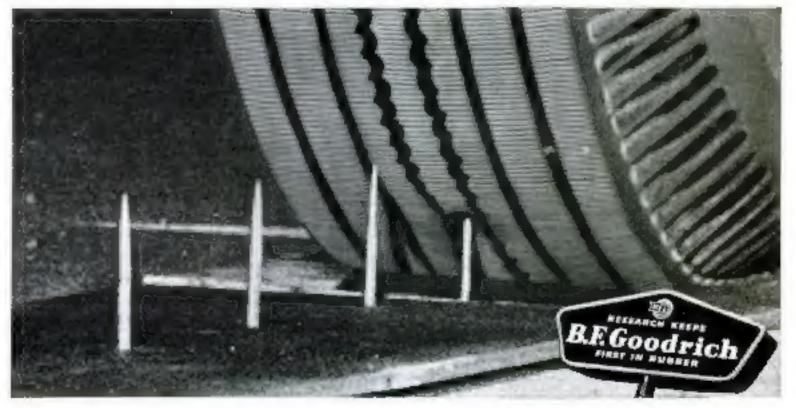

BFG "LIFE-SAVER" TUBELESS TIRE WIPES A WET ROAD SO DRY YOU CAN LIGHT A MATCH ON ITS PATH.

2. BLOWOUTS: CHANGES BLOWOUTS TO SLOWOUTS, GIVES YOU TIME FOR A SAFE STOP!

Under blowout conditions, the BFG "Life-Saver" Tubeless Tire loses air slowly, instead of suddenly like a tire with inner tube. It gives you time for a safe stop. Patents on basic features of Tubeless Tires have been assigned to B. F. Goodrich.

3. PUNCTURES: SEALS ITS OWN PUNCTURES AS YOU RIDE, WITH NO LOSS OF AIR!

Driven over spikes, it does not go flat. A gummy layer under the tread seals around puncturing object, plugs the hole permanently. Find your nearest BFG retailer in your phone book Yellow Pages. The B. F. Goodrich Company, Akron, Ohio.

Genuine Ford Carburetors are

TRACK TESTED TO SAVE YOU GAS

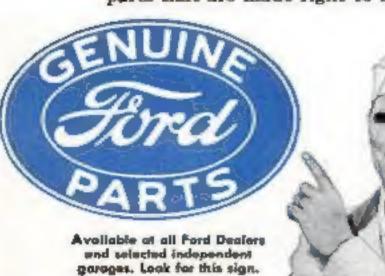

Thousands of hours of precision track-testing and laboratory-proving, assure you that Genuine Ford Carburetors, like all Genuine Ford Parts, are best for your Ford.

Flow-tested for the precise air-gas mixture. For thousands of hours, prototypes of Genuine Ford Carburetors receive this flow-test... to make sure the tiny jets meter out just the right amount of gas to give you top power at top savings. You can not buy a finer, more carefully tested replacement for your Ford than a part that bears the Genuine Ford Parts label!

Start-tested at 40 below zero. Some carburetors may find it tough to start a car at 40-below-zero temperatures... or in desert heat... or on a 30 per cent grade. But not Genuine Ford Carburetors! They're Track-Tested to meet all these conditions. When you demand Genuine Ford Parts you get parts that are made right to fit right to last longer!

LETTERS TO THE EDITORS

MRS. KEFAUVER

Sirs:

I thoroughly enjoyed Robert Wallace's article on Nancy Kefauver ("A Vote for Nancy," Live, June 30) despite his several sly and sometimes foolish digs at Estes, . . . The fact that Kefauver is not a fast talker is, in this voter's opinion, an asset rather than a liability.

I also enjoyed the charming cover picture of Mrs. Kefauver. It is refreshing to view a pretty face which shows character and personality. . . .

C. C. MARBERRY

San Diego, Calif.

Sire:

Clearly, Mr. Kefauver and his family may be personable folks, but they are way beyond their depth in presidential politics.

DAVID A. JENNESS

Williamstown, Mass.

Sira:

You show Nancy Kefauver and her other three children on Linda's bed, and Linda has mumps. Isn't Nancy afraid that she and the rest of her children will also catch it?

R. I. GONZALEZ

Los Angeles, Calif.

 They've had them. Linda was the last to get mumps.—ED.

CHICAGO

Sira:

As natives of Chicago, we felt that the sampling of eating places in the Windy City was excellent and made us feel right at home ("Convention City," LIFE, June 30).

However, the number of places like the Silver Frolics is relatively small. This part of your picture story gave a false impression of what makes up Chicago's amusement world.

MR. AND MRS. T. E. JONES Athens, Ohio

Sire:

I see now why there is not too much hope for a better government when you call such indecent places "attractions" for delegates for both national conventions.

GASTON RAMIREZ

Ames, Iowa

Sira:

"From beer and skittles to fancy vittles, Chicago offers a vast variety of food..." How does one ear skittles?

MRS. ROARK BRADFORD Santa Fe, N. Mex.

 One doesn't. Skittles is not a dish but the wooden ninepins used in an old English pub game. LIFE used the phrase in its broad sense, which indicates enjoyment and pleasure, which Chicago food provides.—ED,

Sirs:

You slurred the United States Army in your reference to the Conrad Hilton Hotel. You state: "The Army took it over in the war, let it run down." You further imply that the Army bungled in selling it at too low a price.

I was there during the war as a captain in the Corps of Engineers. The Army purchased the Conrad Hilton (then known as the Hotel Stevens) in 1942 for the purpose of training radio operators, removed most of its furnishings and sold them at public auction for about $440,000.

Maintenance of the building was excellent throughout the time that it was occupied by the Army. Occupants of each room were held financially responsible for even the slightest damage. This rule was enforced on officers and enlisted personnel alike. Battle-ship linoleum was placed over the hardwood floors of the grand ballroom and the Boulevard Room; plate glass and marble, in many instances, were protected by veneer-board. When the building was offered for sale, the prospective purchasers expressed amazement at the excellent condition of the building.

The Army made a net cash profit of more than one-half million dollars on the sale of the Conrad Hilton and its furnishings. Besides this fact, the Army occupied the building for 13 months without rent—and saved untold millions that would have been spent to build a camp for the training of these soldiers.

HABOLD F. DONNER

Garden City, Mich.

 Net cost of the Hilton to the Army (after sale of the furnishings) was $5,559,000; it was sold for $5,251,-000, or at a loss of $308,000,—ED,

IRAN'S LOCUST PLAGUE

Sira:

In your story on the war against locusts in the Middle East ("Deeds Not Words Pay Off for West," LIFE, June 30), you remark: "The ultimate accolade from Russia: so successful was the West's gesture that the Soviete rushed their own planes to Iran and began spraying poison wherever they could take credit for killing a locust."

In May, 1952 I was in the city of Meshed, Iran for three days and had the unique joy of living in a hotel with 30 Russian Air Force members. They had been in Meshed for several months as part of Russia's contribution toward combating the locust menace, along with a number of their planes which were neatly assembled at the local airport.

True, the reason for their presence was fear of a locust attack on Russia and certainly not sympathy for the Iranian peasant. Nevertheless they were in Iran for a long time before you say they were "rushed" there.

I only suggest that you have prejudiced the readers of your magazine in one of the most sensitive peripheral areas to Russia by an inaccuracy which has propaganda overtones unfortunate for the prestige of Lira.

JAMES H. NOVES

SOVIET CONFERENCE

Sirs:

In your story, "Reds Put the Snatch on Great Minds of the Past" (LIFE, June 30), Nikolai Gogol was mentioned as a Soviet patriot because of his comparison of Russia with a fast troiks, before which "everything else on earth, other peoples and nations, stand aside and give way."

I am curious whether Russia, prizing this allegory today, is aware of the meaning given to it by Feodor M. Dostoevski (an admirer of Gogol) in his novel The Brothers Karamazov, where he says:

"Our fatal troiks dashes on in her headlong flight perhaps to destruction, and in all Russia for long past men have stretched out imploring hands and called a halt to its furious reckless course. And if other nations stand

PLUS-10... The only All-Nylon Cord passenger-car tire!

If you think all tires are just about alike, prepare yourself for a surprise. For here is a tire that is so dramatically superior to any other tire you've ever owned, it will change all your ideas about tire performance!

For the perfect compliment to your car and your judgment, see the new Plus-10 Double Eagle at your Goodyear dealer's now!

PLUS 1 -The only passenger-car tire in the world with an all-nylon cord body.

PLUS 2 —Goodyear Heat-Tempered Nylon Cords make the new Double Eagle 1½ to 2 times as strong as standard tires.

PLUS 3 —Safety! Over 2,000,000 miles of gruelling road tests prove that this is the safest tire ever designed for a passenger car.

PLUS 4-26% more nonskid tread thickness gives up to 42% more safe mileage than standard tires.

PLUS 5 —Sensational new Resist-a-Skid Tread, an exclusive Goodyear development, grips at all angles of skid! Quicker on the start, safer on the stop! Gives safer, surer traction on wet roads, on snow—even on ice.

PLUS 6-Full, safe traction for life! Exclusive Resist-a-Skid tread design never needs re-cutting to restore its traction.

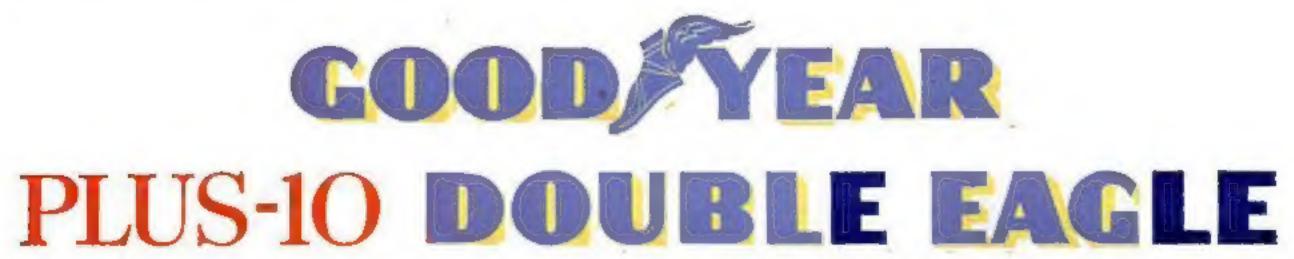

PLUS 7—Welcome comfort! Low-pressure, Super-Cushion ride soaks up road shocks, saves wear and tear on the car and you.

PLUS 8—New Scuff Rib protects white sidewalls when you scrape the curb.

PLUS 9—Extra beauty! Gleaming whitewall contrasts with diamond-sculptured, jet-black shoulders.

PLUS 10—Value! With all the advantages of the exclusive Resist-a-Skid Tread, the nylon cord body, this tire costs only about 5% more than ordinary premium tires made of rayon!

And . . . with the New LifeGuard Safety Tube this tire is blowout-safe and puncture-safe!

Sirs:

Readers who looked at the picture depicting Moslems attending a conference in Moscow would do well to remember that in the early 1920s Soviet propaganda tried to woo the Moslems of the world with phony manifestos and appeals.

The people of Central Asia decried the arbitrary seizure of their mosques, lands and herds by Communist authorities. This wave of resentment against Bolshevik oppression resulted in a mass slaughter of Moslems. The center of Moslem culture, the city of Bokhara, was left a depopulated ghost. ... In all, nearly six million Moslems were killed or deported from Central Islam offered a real challenge to the Sovieta for it is hostile and alien to the Communist doctrine. Let us hope that no Moslems will be deceived by the new Soviet attempts to gain followers by masquerading as friends of islam.

Now everyone can find Ring-Free Oil

Call Western Union, ask for Operator 25 — and you'll soon get nearest Macmillan Oil dealer's location — without charge!

It's the strangest thing.

There are thousands of big, red "M" signs displayed from Coast to Coast -at independent service stations, garages and car dealers selling Macmillan Oil.

Yet we get hundreds and hundreds of letters from motorists asking where they can buy Macmillan Oil-motorists too preoccupied by traffic to notice the Macmillan signs they pass every day.

So we have decided to make it still easier for you to know where you can buy Macmillan Oil.

At no cost to you, we have arranged with Western Union to help you find the location of your nearest Macmillan dealer.

All you have to do is pick up your phone, call Western Union by number, ask for Operator 25, give her your name, address and phone number.

Your inquiry will come direct to my desk and within an hour the information you want will be on its way to you. No letter to write. No charge to you for this service.

You want Macmillan Oil because it pays for itself in the gas it saves. We want you to have it.

Let's get together. Why not call Western Union right now?

624 S. MICHIGAN, CHICAGO

FROM THE OFFICE OF R. S. MACMILLAN, PRESIDENT

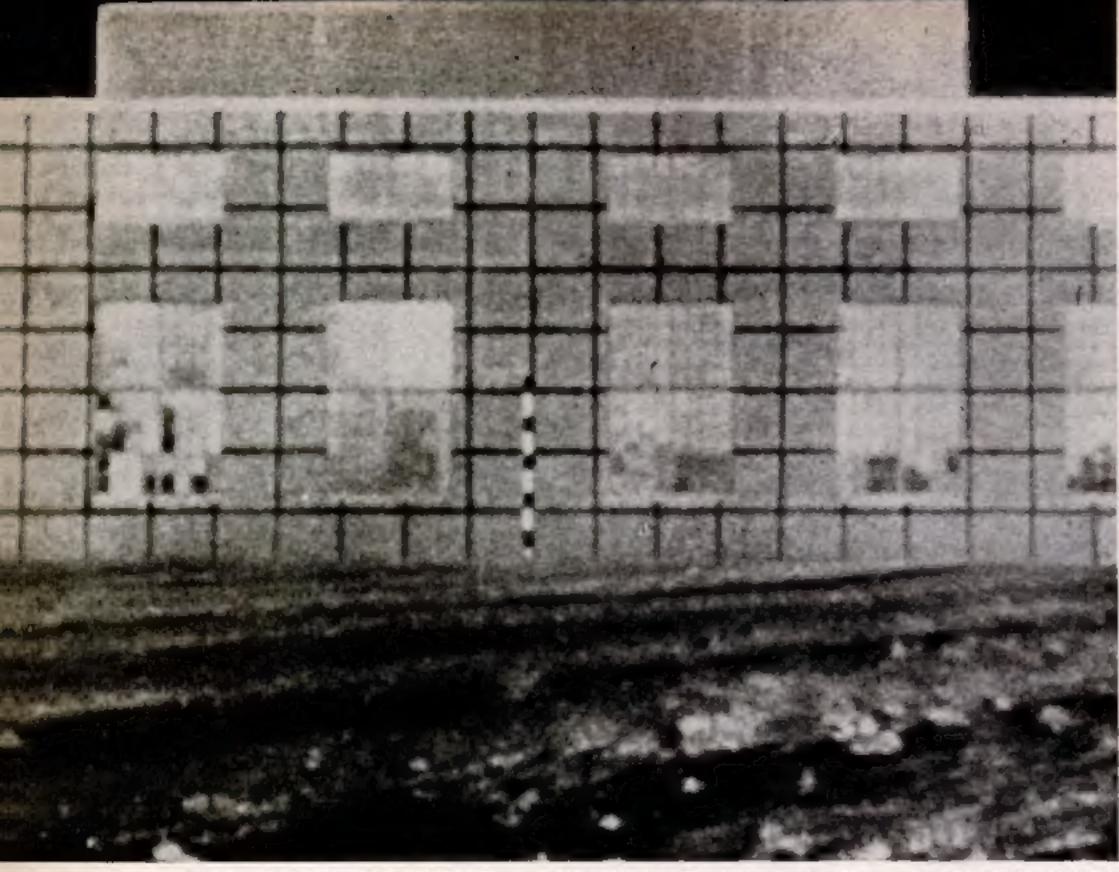

Our Money-Back Guarantee is as strong as we can express it. Here it is:

Macmillan Ring-Free Motor Oil is guaranteed to increase the horsepower of your motor, give more miles per gallon of gasoline, make your motor run smoother, reduce wear and repair: because it removes carbon, cleans the motor, and reduces friction fast by thorough lubrication.

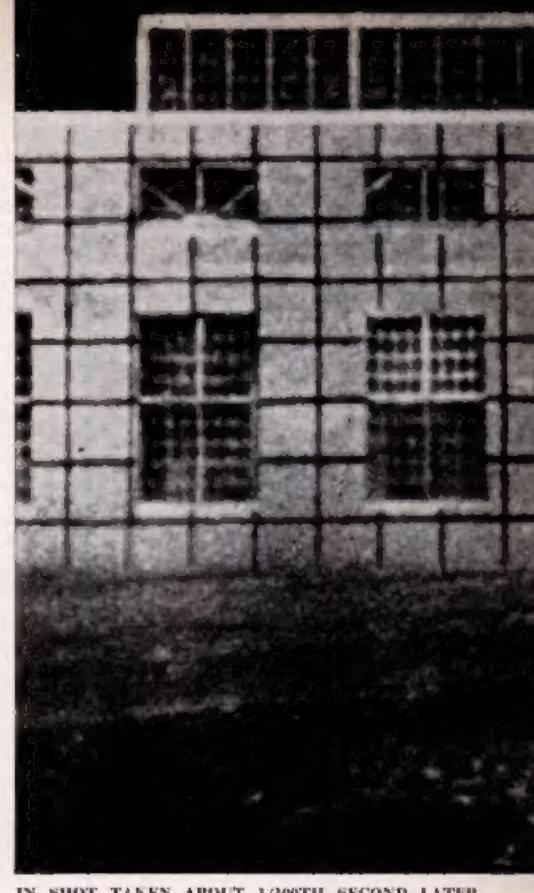

Try a fill and if you are not satisfied that Ring-Free is doing these things, your money will be refunded by your dealer immediately.

How can we make that Guarantee? Because the results of Dynamometer (the testing machine accepted by the automobile industry) tests on hundreds and hundreds of cars like yours showed that motorists get an average of 8% more power from the same amount of gasoline after changing from whatever brand of oil they have been using to Macmillan Ring-Free Motor Oil.

At 25¢ a gallon, 8% means 2¢ saved. Over a normal drain period, that means $2.00 saved-enough to buy a refill of Macmillan. What could be fairer?

The photographs on these pages are the first ever released which show atomic destruction in progress. Taken at Eniwetok Atoll, the Atomic Energy Commission's mid-Pacific proving ground, they appear in a recently issued AEC film called "Operation Greenhouse." This was the code name for the Eniwetok tests which were carried out to measure the effectiveness of some of the newest U.S. atomic weapons.

Tanks, planes and other items of military equipment were placed nearby to determine their durability under atomic attack, while thousands of instruments recorded the heat, radiation and blast of the explosions. To gather data needed by the Civil Defense Administration, the task force constructed houses and a variety of industrial buildings. Then it trained remote-controlled cameras on them to photograph exactly what happened when the shock wave struck.

LIFE'S COVER

Photographer Arnold Newman took this week's cover a month ago when the candidate took time out from seeing the delegates to ait for the first color portrait since his return to the U.S. The picture completed one part of Lire's preparations for last week's Republican convention. Life already had portraits of three others, and these, together with a picture of the superliner S.S. United States, were engraved into covers ready for the presses the mament the convention ended. The picture of S.S. United States, prepared in case the G.O.P. was deadlooked at press time, appears on page 59.

How we retired in 15 years with $250 a month

Just fifteen years ago I made up my mind that I'd retire. I wasn't making a lot of money, but I figured you can do almost anything if you really set your heart on it. Thanks to that step in 1935, I'm picking oranges in my own Florida backyard today. With an income of $250 a month, guaranteed for life, plus social security benefits we'll be getting soon, Helen and I are lwing.

Back in '35, things weren't going so well at the office. Like most everyone else, we had salary cuts. But one friend of mine-Jim Morse-was hardly bothered at all. "I'm going to retire anyway," he said. "I'll be selling the house and packing up for Florida." How he could afford it I couldn't figure, because he never made more than a comfortable living.

"The answer is simple," said Jim, "a fellow's got to look ahead. He's got to realize he won't always be forty. He won't always be able to keep plugging at the same old job. He shouldn't have to either. With his family grown, he can live well on a lot less."

"Yes, but how can you plan today?" I asked.

"There'll always be business ups and downs," said Jim, "but there's an up-to-date way to insure yourself an income you can retire on no matter what happens.

It's called the Phoenix Mutual Retirement Income Plan, I started mine fifteen years ago and never felt happier! Now, pretty soon, I'll be getting my first check and retiring."

He told me that Phoenix Mutual had a booklet explaining all about its retirement income plans. So I dropped them a card. When I read the booklet. I knew this was for mel Not long after, I qualified for a Phoenix Mutual Plan of my own.

Since then, I've seen a lot of changes. The war came. Boom times, too. But I've always looked forward to what Helen and I are doing today -living our own life with a monthly check for $250 and no clock to punch. You just can't believe how fast fifteen years go-when there's a carefree future ahead.

NEW LEADERS, NEW ZEAL TAKE 'OLD' OUT OF G.O.P.

The triumphantly raised hand, the exuberance of a victor in the moment of victory hardly fought and rightfully won is captured a ove by Life Photographer George Skadding. It is something more—a turning point in American politics. No battle for the Republican nomination had been more intensely and bitterly fought. But the 25th Republican convention responded to the will of the voters freely expressed in primaries and now freely recorded in the nomination of Dwight D. Eisenhower.

It was clear long ago that the Republican choice this year surely would be between two distinguished Americans. One, Senator Robert A. Taft, held the firm allegiance of great dedicated sections of his party. But the demand that Eisenhower become a candidate had the kind of kinetic force that bursts all political boundaries. So evident were his qualities for leadership that even before he had assented to the nomination he was the choice of many of the country's leading newspapers and magazines. In six primaries he polled the amazing number of 940,456 votes (vs. 543,752 for Taft) without campaigning once in person.

for Taft) without campaigning once in person.

In the end it was not his popularity alone that made him a nominee but a moral issue—the issue of whether those who voted for him would have their votes counted by the convention. It was fought to a decision before the greatest audience in history (pp. 18, 19) and the greatest gallery of reporters and photographers ever assembled. The result was an open convention and one in which the delegates had to stand up and be counted before all the world

The convention battle may have left sears and divisions within the rank and file but it certainly brought new blood and new leadership to the party. The younger men made the successful fight which really decided the nomination and then the convention followed through in a bold appeal to youth by picking as the vice-presidential candidate a 39-year-old senator from California, Richard Nixon.

IN KITCHEN CONFERENCE at Congress Hotel, Taft leader Clarence Brown sought compromise with Eisenhower man John Heselton. Henry Zweifel, Texas, listens in. But Eisenhower refused all deals, DECISION CAME ON THE MORAL ISSUE

In a deserted kitchen of the Congress Hotel, in its ornate Gold Room where the credentials committee met and in the vast echoing amphitheater at the stockyards the struggle for the nomination went on for a full five days. But the most decisive roll call was not the last but the first—it came on the first afternoon when the convention was only 4½ hours old.

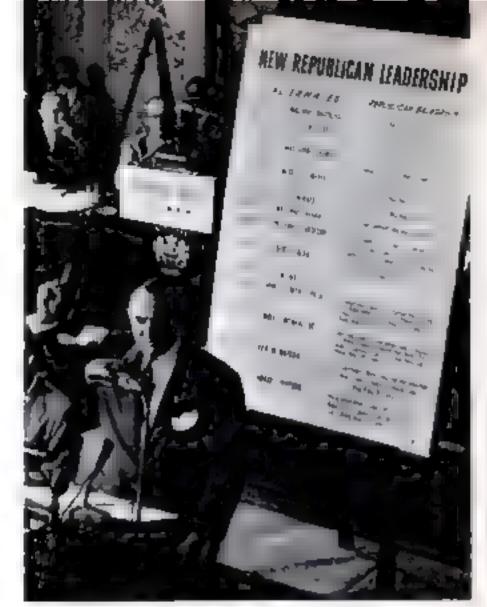

The roll call was forced on the "moral issue": raised by the Eisenhower forces against the delegates whose credentials were disputed. At about the time these delegates were chosen two canny, experienced politicians, Herb Brownell of New York and Wesley Roberts of Kansas (see page 26) took over from the sometimes amateurish managers of Ike's earlier campaigns. The Taft men knew that they could not win the nomination without the disputed southern delegates and the Ike men knew that so long as they rode an issue there would be a question about these Taft votes. They exploited it to the fullest.

Against the Taft forces were arrayed a solid 95 votes controlled by New York's Governor Dewey and 70 California votes controlled by Governor Warren. On the Wednesday before the convention Taft's floor manager Tom Coleman made his last plea for support to Pennsylvania's Governor Fine. As he left the governor said, "Tom I know that you would like to know this—Herb Brownell [Eisenhower's campaign strategist] is coming to see me tomorrow."

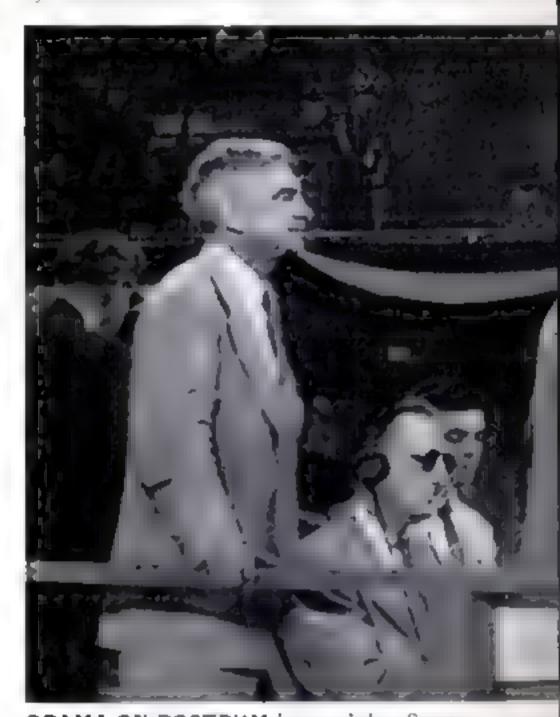

Coleman, wise in the ways of politics, knew what this political hint meant. He knew that on the moral issue Pennsylvania's votes would be cast against Taft. The Taft strategy then was to evade an early vote and thus avoid disclosing their weakness.

But on Monday, when the gavel fell, the battle was joined and with it began a series of Taft blunders. The Taft forces moved that the convention adopt the old rule of 1948; Ike's men countered with a "fair play" motion that barred the contested delegates from balloting on any disputed group. At this point the Taft forces had been planning to raise a point of order which would have exempted seven of the Louisiana delegates from the dispute. Such a point would have had to be sustained or instantly rejected by the whole convention without debate. But at the last minute one of the Tuft floor managers, Clarence Brown, unexpectedly offered an amendment. This was subject to debate and a roll call vote—a roll call that would disclose Taft's true strength.

Belatedly and almost frantically Taft's men offered a compromise. "I beseech you," cried Senator Bricker of Ohio, "to accept our amendment," offering at the same time to accept the opposition motion. The Ike floor managers would accept no compromise and forced the roll call. The decisive result: Against the Brown amendment (and Taft) 658 votes, For 548. There was no doubt that Eisenhower was in.

ON STAGE AND OFF, SUMMERFIELD AND FINE FORM DRAMATIC TEAM

An act viewed appreciatively by drama-loving delegates (but glumpsed only occasionally by TV viewers) is shown below. Players in this Rosen-crantz-and-Guildenstern team were Governor John Fine of Pennsylvania and Michigan State Chairman Arthur Summerfield, both heads of powerful uncommitted delegations, experts at keeping mum and mighty politickers. Fine in particular epitomized the U.S. politician in his finest

AT LUNCH Fine (center) told Pennsylvania Senator James Duff and state GOP chairman Harvey Tavlor (right) that he felt their state was pro-Eisenhower.

PLAYING ALONG at the moment, Summerfield met Toft Floor Manager Tom Coleman near Stassen's hotel headquarters. Coleman sought to convert him.

IN BEDROOM of Fine's hotel suite Summerfield and Fine early agreed to stand together for Ike. They also agreed not to reveal their decision immediately.

A SERIOUS TALK between Summerfield (lower center) and some of Eisenhower's floor strategists occurred just before one of the convention sessions.

WITH A TAFTMAN, Summerfield talks in confidential undertones during critical debate on the floor. The Taft man was Illinois Senator Everett Dirksen.

HOARSE SUMMONS to his delegation is called through a newspaper by Summerfield who worked like a coxswain to maintain his crew's zest for Ike.

CALL TO SUMMERFIELD was one of the many Fine made to the Michigan delegation chairman. This was in a telephone booth in an amphitheater corridor.

A MYSTERY CALL in another phone booth was made by Summerfield who talked earnestly to a politician whose identity he later refused to disclose.

quadrennial hour, holding incessant mouth-to-ear confabs with other key figures, scurrying down hotel corridors to clude the overcurious press and praising practically any candidate. Occasionally he turned up in the company of such glamour veterans and political amateurs as Screen Actress Irene Dunne, and once turned up on the rostrum, dewlaps a-quiver with rage, at what he regarded as a doublecross. Summerfield meanwhile harangued his delegation through folded newspaper and megaphone, and argued at times with ushers who objected to his holding a caucus which blocked aisles supposed to be kept clear. But at convention's end both men reached the politician's supreme goal: they had helped put over the winner. Summerfield was promptly rewarded with the GOP chairmanship and given responsibility for running Ike's campaign against the Democrats.

AT CAUCUS with his 70-man delegation Fine persuaded them to vote affirmatively on the "fair play" amendment. Subsequently 57 voted as he had asked.

CHEEK-BY-JOWL, Summerfield and Fine whispered on the convention floor awaiting the arrival of General MacArthur, once Fine's favorite candidate.

A JAUNTY MEETING between Senator Duff, an early Ike proponent and Fine, whose convictions of Ike's chances were strengthening, made each smile.

AT SHADOWY MEETING in hotel corridor Fine spurns Pennsylvania National Committeeman Mason Owlett's plea to support Georgia's 17 Taft delegates.

GUARDED BY USHERS they met in a corridor of the amphitheater which was also being used as a rendezvous by Taftmen for their quick meetings.

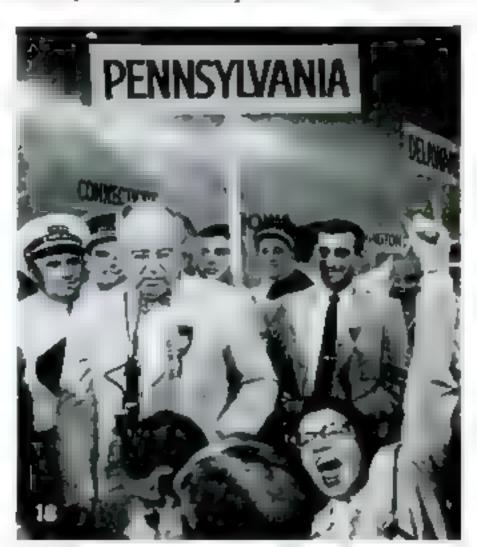

DEWEY LISTENS as Fine, in a meeting in private duning room of the Stock Yard Inn near the amphitheater, said he has finally decided on Eisenhower.

ELECTRIC AMPLIFIER was used by Fine to address his big group. He understood they were promised time to meet and discuss the Georgia question.

ANGRY SCENE occurred between Fine and Hallanan when latter proceeded with a Georgia vote during absence of Fine. He returned from caucus fast.

APPROVAL of the Fine delegation, back from its caucus, was highlighted by Fine's own answer to roll call dispute with: "Pennsylvania will never pass."

MAMIE EMERGES AS

Up to last week almost any American could tell you that lke Eisenhower had a wife named Mamie who wore her hair in bangs, but that was about all. In Chicago they began to find out more about her. They smothered her with bouquets, begged her for autographs and guessed at the origin of her hat (it came from Paris). The day after she arrived, she found herself shaking the hands of 3,000 eager visitors. And when she went to bed, sound trucks reminded her that a new public life was only beginning for her. They roared out a new song that ended, "Ma-mie, what a wonderful name For the First Lady of our Land."

But Mamie took the fuss and lyrics calmly, emerging from her first venture into public life with a new reputation as a poised, pleasant and in ght synd someon who appeared sources than she was (55). In her public utterances she settled mainly for "This makes me very happy" or "You're all very kind." She proved she could turn aside silly questions gracefully and directly. When Hedda Hopper asked whether Mamie, as first lady, would expect all women to wear bangs, she quietly replied, "I should say not." Asked if she as "a soldier's wife" would worry when her soldier son went to Korea, she answered, "That's a strange question to ask a mother. Soldier's wife or not, I'm still very much a mother." Even the heavy handshaking turned out to be no ordeal-once she had learned to remove the heavy West Point ring Ike gave her in 1916. In all the excitement and uproar on the speaker's stand she kept her natural spontaneity; when Mrs. Nixon, wife of the vice presidential nominee, was brought up to take her seat, Mamie turned to her new running mate and said, "You're the prettiest thing."

MAMIE'S RUNNING MATE, pretty red-haired Pat Nixon. 39, was be-leged by camera and radio men after her husband's nomination. She was Pat Ryan, a

MACARTHUR'S BIG SPEECH

Leaning confidently into the microphones on opening night. General Douglas MacArthur delivered keynote address. Speaking in a voice that did not always have its customary mellow authority, be lit into the administration. But he could not match the magic of his great 1951 speech before Congress and received disappointingly brief applicase. Noting this and some abortive efforts to start a MacArthur boom, many began to believe that the General indeed was fading away.

PUERTO RICO'S BIG LAUGH

After much polling of hig delegations, a request for polling of the three-man Puerto Rican group amouthed tense Wednesday night tempers with waves of laughter. The requestor was Marceline Romany, who felt he was being deprived of his vote. In a Spanish accent he insisted his name was on the temporary roll. When the chair agreed, he demanded a reading of delegates' names. Finally, as the clerk stumbled through a Spanish tongue-twister, (Mrs. Providencia Ramos de Villamil) he asked "What was that name?" Then, "That's all right, she's not here." As the hall roared again, Romany voted to seat Georgia's Ike delegation.

MEMORABLE EVENTS INCLUDE THE

WHISTLES AND BANNERS,

No sooner had each nomination speech ended than the wild demonstrations began and the hall of the convention burst into a frenzy of whistles and sirens. Jiggling and waving placards, banners, flags and balloons turned the huge arena into a kaleidoscope of movement (Life will publish a color photograph of the demonstration in the Aug. 4 issue). Eisenhower and Taft had the most frantic demonstrations, each lasting at least 40 minutes until they were halted by the chair. Stassen's backers, when their time came, went demonstrationless on the grounds of maintaining proper dignity, and quietly distributed roses instead.

A MOMENT OF TRIUMPH

When the name of Dwight Eisenhower was finally put in nomination and the big demonstration had begun Leverett Saltonstall (foreground), a dignified Massachusetts senator who had worked for Eisenhower, seized an Ike placard and begun to dence about the floor in a most unBostonian way. Behind him another dignified Bostonian took refuge by grasping his state's signpost. On Saltonstall's right was Senator Henry Cabot Lodge who had helped run Ike's victorious campaign.

A MOMENT OF SADNESS

On Tuesday night Ex-President Herbert Hoover took the speaker's stand. A decade ago, he was vilified as the architect of the 1929 depression, but in recent years he has re-emerged as a man of stature and intellect; his work on the Hoover Report has drawn praise even from President Truman. On Tuesday, before Hoover could begin his address, the delegates and the galleries staged a heartwarming. 13-minute demonstration. When he began Hoover, now 77, remarked that "due to the inexorable course of nature" he would probably never address the convention again, they drowned out his words with loud cries of "No! No!"

IT ENDS WITH TEARS, GRINS, AND A PROMISE

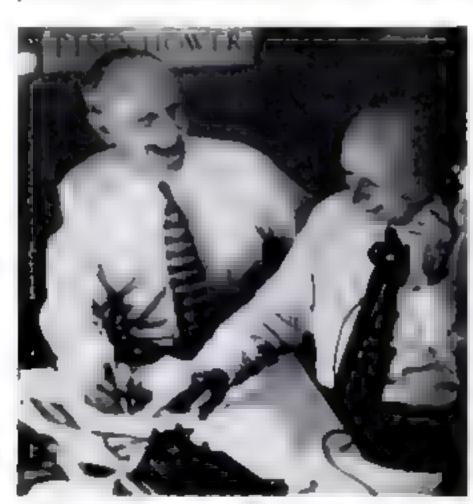

CHOKED UP, Dave Ingalls, Taft's campaign manager and second cousin, fights back tears as Taft is finally defeated on the convention floor. Ike polled

IKE'S 'GREAT CRUSADE'

ITS SOLE OBJECTIVE IS A REPUBLICAN VICTORY—FOR MORE THAN REPUBLICAN REASONS

The Republican convention of 1952 will be memorable for many years. Not only did it pick the best possible candidate, but it carried to the first national TV audience more political drama than any convention has held in years. Besides their normal factional discord, the Republicans were deeply divided this year over a moral issue, that of the stolen delegates. On this issue, the Old Guard of the party got hold of the wrong side, and the Ikemen seized the right. Ike's victory was therefore also a victory of right over wrong. No dramatist could write a simpler, more sure-fire and more deeply satisfying plot than that.

Because he won on a moral issue, Ike's acceptance speech sounded just right. "You have summoned me," he said, "to lead a great crusade." The Republicans had just shriven themselves in public. If there is crusading to be done, they are in good moral shape for it, certainly far better shape than the Democrats. But are they in good political shape also? Is "crusade" the right word for the task ahead of them?

That task, as lke described it, is first and foremost to get elected. And that is in fact the one and only objective on which all wings of the Republican party are now agreed. Ike was not nominated by acclamation; he started no prairie fires. There was as much holy zeal in the Tast camp as in his, perhaps more; and the practical men who awang the nomination for Ike did so with one very practical argument: Ike can win. If that is expediency, let Democrats make the most of it.

So perhaps "crusade" is too strong a word for the next few months of Republican activity. The Republican troops are a quite miscellaneous crew of Americans who are divided, like the rest of the human race, along sharp lines of temperament, geography and belief. But while they are united as yet only by a desire to win, that desire is not a mere hunger for patronage and office. The Republicans want to win in order to prove something, both to themselves and to the nation.

The why of 'time for a change'

What do these Republicans want to prove? First, that a change of administration is still possible in the U.S.

Each four years they have used one slogan with increasing intensity: "It's time for a change." This year the slogan is embossed with better-than-usual arguments, from the chronic grafting of the Trumanites to the Hiss case. But these arguments all get answers of sorts. What gets no answer, and can only be answered by a Republican victory, is the conviction behind the slogan. This is the conviction that the American system of divided powers, which underpins our liberty, has a temporal dimension; that despite the words of the Constitution, growing bureaucracy (as Hoover put it) "has a real inherent power"; that the only sure check on that power is the power to change administrations; that we can not be sure we still have this power until we in fact turn the Democrats out.

Rogers Dunn of Connecticut correctly predicted the elections of 1944 and 1948 by analyzing the distributions of federal jobs in various key states. It is the cynical implication of his thesis that enough votes can be bought by jobs to make "spend and spend, elect and elect" a true description of what has been happening to this country. Republicans are not abnormally cynical, but they know that only a Republican victory can destroy this cynical thesis. They would like to see it destroyed. They would like to prove that the Fair Deal formula of subsidies and promises is not the only way to win elections and has not made elections mere rituals. They cannot prove that beyond question except by winning. That is why they regard a Republican victory as all-important.

They would also like to prove something in foreign affairs. Republican attacks on the Acheson foreign policy often run to inarticulateness, bad logic and mere wrath. Yet the real reason why Republicans want control of U.S. foreign policy is neither complicated nor sinister. They want to break the Democrats' near-monopoly of respectable opinion about foreign policy, and to stop the consequent blackmail to which any and all opposition to the Acheson policies is now in some degree subject.

Some of Ike's own supporters do not really trust the Republicans on foreign policy. Even the tolerant New York Times is extremely quick to rebuke any Republican criticism of the Korean war, for example, unless it first pays exaggerated obeisance to the role of the United Nations. Acheson's admirers (both at home and abroad) have perfected certain subtle tests which must be passed to ward off a charge of "isolationism." Many Republicans are too plain-speaking to pass these tests. But there is only one way they can prove that the tests are silly and the charge a libel. That is by being made responsible for an alternative to the Acheson policy.

Proof depends on victory

The Dulles plank in the Republican platform shows that a non-isolationist, non-Acheson foreign policy can be worked out satisfactorily on paper. But platforms never convinced anybody, and in the case of foreign affairs a successful policy is never called so except by historians, after it has proved itself. To win any credit from historians of foreign policy, the Republicans must have charge of foreign policy long enough to have some effect on it. Meanwhile they can only bemoan the way so many current historians so misrepresent the actual disasters into which the Achesonian policy has led the nation.

Here, then, are two major reasons why the Republicans are so determined to win this year. Only by winning can they really prove what they know to be true: that this country can be better governed than it is, and that there can be less fear and fewer clouds on its horizon. This feeling is deeply held by most Republicans, whether Old Guard or new. Because it is a difficult feeling to express in a debate, the Democrats are already saying that Ike's will be a "no issue" campaign. Of course there are concrete issues—plenty of them. Taft has ably exposed them for months in one debate after another all over the country. But now the Republicans want to win more than the debates: they want to win the election.

That is why they chose lke, and why lke last week summoned them to unite and organize from top to bottom. Even in Texas, where the bitterness had run deep, Taft supporters signed up to work for lke as soon as they got home. The desire of patriotic Taftmen to beat the Democrats has never been in question. As for the lkemen, some of them must now prove that they are as serious about elections as about conventions. But certainly lke is serious, and he knows how to inspire seriousness in others

So the Republicans have a leader, a set of issues, a moral victory over some of their members and the satisfying memory of a great convention. More than all these, they have a will and a need for victory. By November, "crusade" may not be too strong a word.

But one Amermean died when he tried to disprove the charge by eating a germ-laden insect dropped by a U.S. plane. To prove his points, the Dean displayed a 15-yard Chinese scroll, but didn't find it necessary to explain what it said. Foreign political throes

While the U.S. was in the throcs of a convention (pp. 14-27), other countries were having some political throcs of their own.

In Mexico the presidential election was conducted with unparalleled peacefulness. On voting day not a shot was fired as Adolfo Ruiz Cortines, a firm friend of the U.S., was elected. But next day a delayed explosion took place as supporters of defeated candidate General Henriquez Guzmán rioted. Post-election result: 7 dead, 89 injured, 524 arrested.

In France Premier Antoine Pinay won an important vote of confidence with the help of 28 deputies who broke away from De Gaulle's Rally of the French People and formed the 12th French political party.

In Iran, Mossadegh balked at forming a new government because only 14 out of 57 senators voted for him. But since there was no other candidate, the reluctant premier allowed himself to be consoled and accepted the job.

Was Joshua at Jericho?

Excavating at Jericho in the Holy Land, a team of British and American archaeologists have dug up the oldest town yet discovered anywhere in the world—the ruins of a massive stone wall dating back to the Neolithic Age, before 5000 B.C. On the same site they have also found later ruins of other cities. But in spite of their best efforts the archaeologists found no tumbled-down walls from the period of 1400 to 1260 B.C.—the time when Joshua supposedly fought the battle of Jericho.

Misleading mural

The Foreign Service Journal last week entered the rather specialized field of art criticism, proposing that a mural in the main lobby of the State Department be "crased, eradicated, expunged, deleted, and destroyed—or, at the very least, decently veiled." The Journal felt that the mural, inherited from the War Department, might be misinterpreted by foreign diplomats. There seemed to be some reason for these fears, since the painting is largely devoted to armed soldiers, screaming eagles and bombardiers preparing to bomb.

SHERIFF'S DEPUTIES DRAG A WIDOW FROM HOUSE AND HOME

The Widow Stevens, who had had her 80-acre farm auctioned off for refusing to pay a $176 debt she owed as a stockholder in a bankrupt insurance company, had been saved from eviction last month by her neighbors, who repulsed the sheriff (Life, June 16). But last week Sheriff Clark Gregory came back. While a cordon of 40 state troopers kept back the angry neighbors, Gregory and 15 deputies smashed down the front and rear doors, stripped the house and piled the furniture in a waiting truck. Among the items removed was Widow Stevens herself, who was dragged away by a pair of deputies.

While the U.S. Information Service library in London is dedicated to freedom from censorship, officials last week felt justified in removing one piece of reading matter. They took down a banner which two Communists, posing as electricians, had managed to drape from the library balcony. The banner read: "Ridgway—Go Home."

Heman Sweatt flunks out

LAW STUDENT SWEATT

Two years ago Heman Sweatt, a Houston Negro, won a U.S. Supreme Court decision granting him the right to attend the segregated University of Texas Law School (Life, Oct. 16, 1950). Last week, after getting consistently poor grades, partly because of illness, Sweatt flunked out. But he did not feel that he had been discriminated against either in his marks or in his personal life. In spite of his own failure as a law student he had won a triumph for his race, for another Negro, who entered the law school when Sweatt broke the barrier, is graduating next January.

In Chicago a Brooklyn jewelry salesman named Charles Silver decided to save $1 by moving on from an $8 hotel to a $7 hotel. Between hotels a hold-up man caught Silver and took from him between $75,000 and $90,000 worth of diamonds.

Flabbergasted mothers

Until last month quadruplets were mighty scarce in New England. Then in Weymouth, Mass., Mrs. John Manning, who had expected quintuplets, gave birth to one daughter and three sons. And last week in Portland, Maine, Mrs. Silas Pinkham, who expected only one child, turned out one son and three daughters. Since quadruplets appear only once in every 680,000 births, both Mrs. Manning and Mrs. Pinkham had a right to be flabbergasted. But by far the most flabbergasted multiple mother of the month was Mrs. Nicholas Winterstein of Sarreguemines, France. Expecting to give birth to her 20th child, Mrs. Winterstein produced not only her 20th, but also her 21st and 22nd.

Harried Harry, tired and tense, had driven all day long.

The sun heat down, the children fussed, and everything went wrong. Up spoke his wife: "Now, children, we're in hick, so please don't cry. We're in the heart of town, and there's a Statler right near by!"

2. And at the Statler door, attendants took their car away

They marched into the lobby, and they registered to stay.

They got their rooms—and oh, such rooms! So cheerful, cool and bright—

The beds were fresh and clean, and every last detail was right.

3. A little later, much refreshed, they went downstars to dine. "What food!" eried Harry. "It's the tope! The service, too, is fine!" The chicks had special menus - children's plates and silver, too—And, joy of joys, the waiter brought balloons when they were through!

4. That evening, Harry and his wife went out to see a show.

They employed a Statler sitter, so the children let them go.

The youngsters settled down to hear a story and to cat

The bowl of frint the Statler sends all youngsters for a treat.

5. Next morning, bright and early, they were on their way once more. They'd ordered up a big box hinch, their car was at the door. Said Harry, "I feel wonderful! Boy, what a perfect rest! We'll always stay at Statler, where you really are a guest!"

The Iron Curtain press balanced the good news with the bad. Mrs. Rubl fights against graft

Mrs. Barbara Rubi had obviously been reading too many stories about graft in New York City's police force. When Patrolman Carmine de Franco wrote out a summons for her because her dog was loose in a children's playground, he asked for her credentials. As Mrs. Rubi explained in court, "I thought when a cop asked for credentials, you were supposed to open your purse and hand him $5. So I said, 'Here's my credentials,' and hit him, I said, 'You'll not get $5 from me, you grafter.'" The judge decoded that suspicious Mrs. Rubi had behaved unkindly toward Patrolman De Franco and fined her $50 or 30 days. But Mrs. Rubi wasn't going to pay money to a judge, either. She chose the 30 days and went off to the workhouse where she planned to write her memoirs, exposing both Patrolman De Franco and a sheriff in New Mexico who had once had a light with her about a horse. But before she could start writing. Mr. Rubi paid the $50 fine and took his wife away.

RED-TAPED GOLD

Treasure hunter is balked by law after finding an old pirate hoard

Edward Low, a pirate with a penchant for cutting off his captives' noses, buried his treasure on a lonely Nova Scotian island in the Bay of Fundy more than 200 years ago. But he was prevented from retrieving his hoard by the authorities, who caught and hanged him. Last month Edward Rowe Snow, a Massachusetts expert on colonial pirates, found a small part of Low's gold, but he too was prevented by the authorities from making off with Low's loot.

Armed with a copy of Low's map, which he had obtained after seven years of negotiation, and a detector device used by plumbers to locate buried pipe, Snow made his way to almost inaccessible Isle Haute. Other treasure hunters there before him had taken out $20,000 in gold. Still Snow's search was quickly rewarded. He uncovered a small cache of old bones and eight gold coins, including Portuguese doubloons, dated 1710, worth perhaps $1,200. But as Snow was about to leave, Canadian officials impounded the coins and said that, under the law of the realm, Snow would have to have an export license, even for pirate gold.

PIRATE'S OWN MAP used by Snow indicates Low's cache of treasure at "the place" and listed, above Low's name, the loot of the vessel Victoria as 23,758 pieces of eight and 1,355 pieces of gold.

TREASURE ISLAND is tray, 115 x 1/4-mile Isle Haute, 13 miles out in the Bay of Fundy. Discovered by Champlain in 1604, the island probably was picked by Low for his pirate cache because the forbidding 50-foot tides and the 300-foot rocky cliffs render the place inaccessible except for a few hours of each day.

Incredible—but in less time than the few minutes it takes to drink a cup of hot coffee a Lockheed Starfire (F-94C) can Take off from a cold start— Climb 7 miles up in any weather—

Locate enemy bomber automatically—

Destroy the invader, without ever seeing it.

And in another few minutes the 2man Starfire crew would be back at their base (without ever seeing the bomber they destroyed).

Today these all-weather jet interceptors are being delivered to the U.S. Air Force for 24-hour duty guarding U.S. borders and key cities. It gives the Air Force a fast-climbing jet fighter that is almost automatic—forerunner of planes that may actually fly and fight by themselves.

The Starfire's brain center can locate invading bombers on the darkest, atormiest night. The Starfire is a new type of fighter without guns. Its unique all-rocket armament can quickly and completely destroy the biggest bomber built.

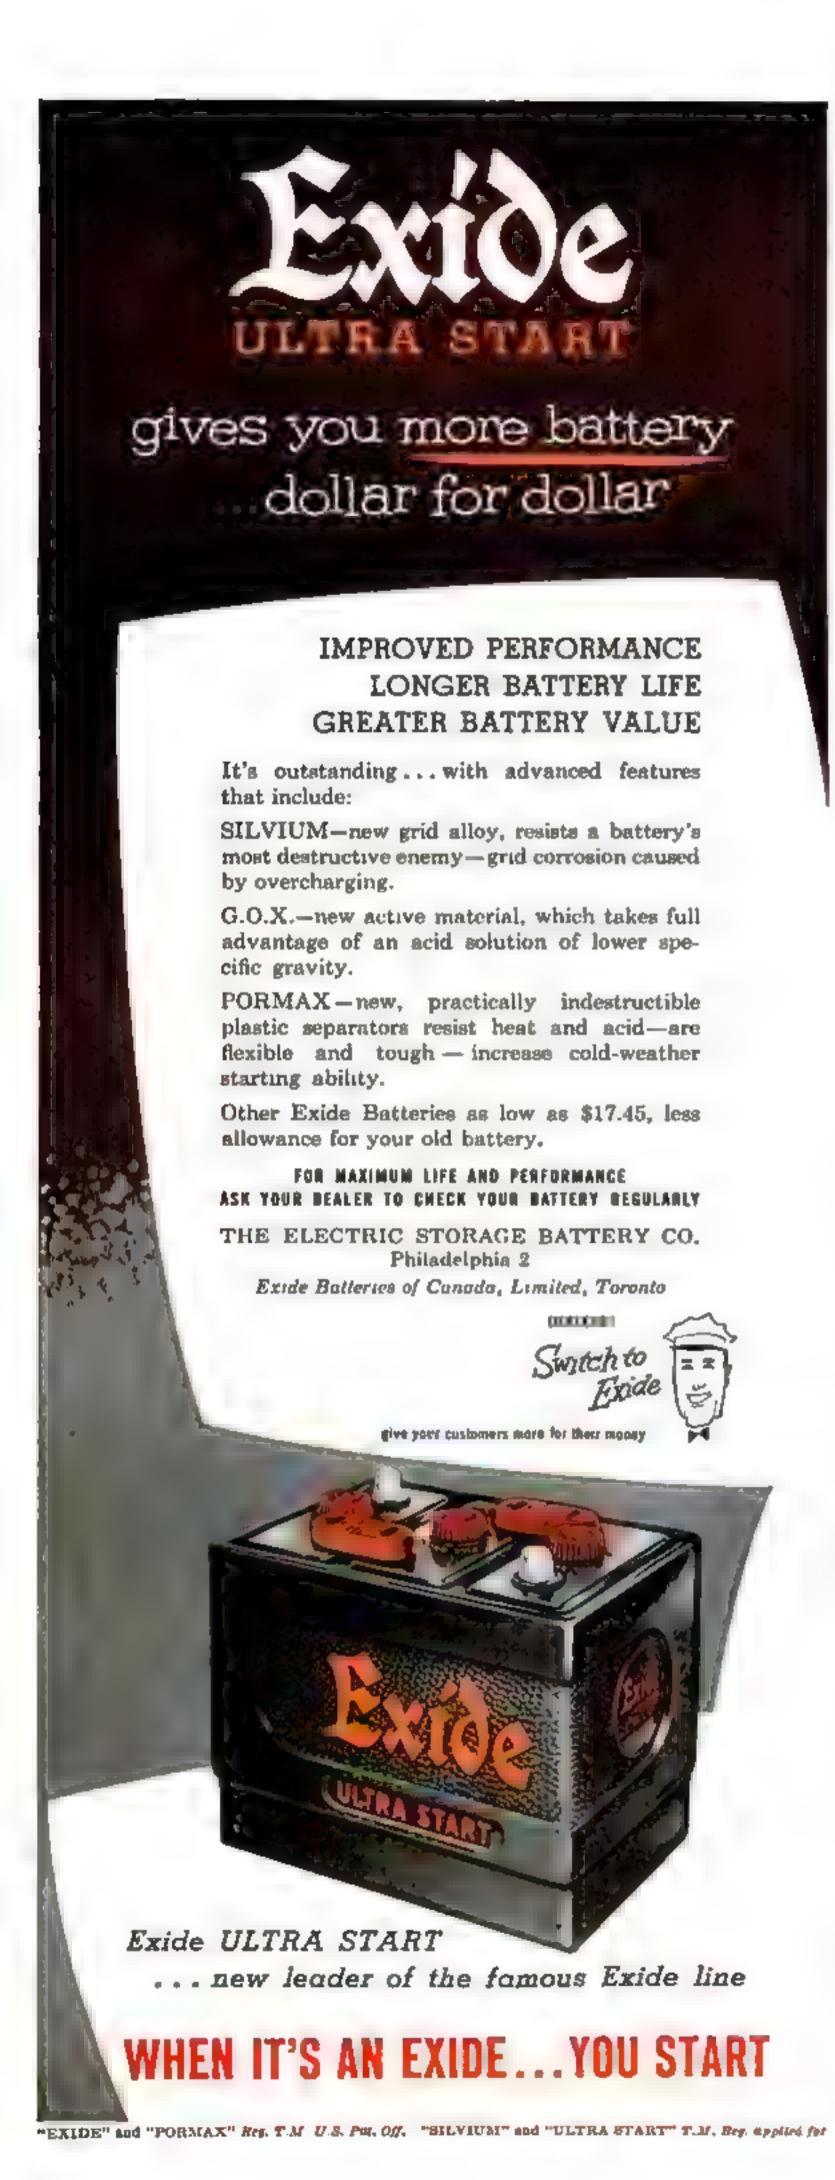

The Starfire is another example of Lockheed design "stretch"—an engineering achievement of creating a more advanced airplane out of a proved model already in production. This greatly speeds development and production of the second model and cuts cost. Forerunner of the Starfire is the Lockheed F-80 Shooting Star of Korean fame, America's first operational jet fighter. Lockheed is the world's leading builder of jet aircraft.

MIKE'S VENICE

With nymphs and gondolas Todd gives Strauss in seaside stadium

On the theory that people who spend a day at the beach hate to go home at night, Park Commissioner Robert Moses has just built a $1 million stadium at Jones Beach, Long Island, devoted chiefly to entertainment after dark. The new stadium, which seats 8,200, opened with A Night in Venice, an 1883 operetta by Johann Strauss spruced up by Producer Michael Todd (p. 44), one of Broadway's few showmen with a taste and talent for the grandiose.

Getting his show rigged up was something of a nightmare in Venice for Todd. The scenery blew down in a gale. A flotilla of gondolas was as hard to handle as a naval battle. A bevy of nymplis had to swim underwater and emerge on a coral-bedecked elevator (opposite page), which sank unexpectedly on opening night, dumping the nymphs into the lagoon. But the show opened on time, and critics agreed it offered a fine way to pass a summer evening.

COSTUME TROUBLE is remedied at dress rehearsal when wardrobe mistress scurries on stage and hems actors' cloaks as they line up for big chorus number.

PIE TROUBLE messes up the stage when blueberry pies, provided by Todd as a snack for troupe of 425 during midnight rehearsal, were accidentally spilled.

TALL GIRL, LOW-JOKE SHOWMAN

Mike Todd, producer of A Night in Venice, is at 44 the American theater's last big showman in the tall-girl, low-joke tradition. Born in Minneapolis, son of a poor rabbi who ran a general store, he never finished high school but managed, before he was 20, to make and lose a million. He made it, as he makes his money now, through a combination of native shrewdness, salesmanship and extraordinary courage, or crust. At 15 he was a salesman in a Chicago shoe store. When a widow came in to buy some shoes for her husband to be buried in, Todd sold her the best pair in the house and talked her into replacing the leather heels with rubber ones at 75¢ extra. At 16, having given up shoe selling, he noticed that Chicago construction workers were making $13 a day and that there was a shortage of trained men, so he bought 1,000 bricks and a pile of sand and founded a bricklayers' college. Later he went into a home-improvement and contracting business, where he picked up and dropped his first fortune. When Hollywood began to make sound movies Todd observed that there was a scarcity of soundproofing experts, so he went West, announced that he was the best in the business and became an executive, although to this day he does not know a vacuum tube from a beer bottle.

Todd broke into live show business at the Chicago World's Fair in 1933 with an act called Flame Dance, an incendiary strip tease that involved a girl, an asbestos harness and a pair of inflammable wings. He scorched a few girls before he perfected the art form, but it made money. Thereafter, dispensing with flame, wings and harness, he concentrated on the really important part of the act and produced some 15 major shows in 10 years. Among them were such successes as The Hot Mikado, Up in Central Park, Something for the Boys and As the Girls Go, and such flops as Call Me Ziggy, which collapsed in less than a week.

OLD TINTYPE reveals him as dashing ladies' man at 12.

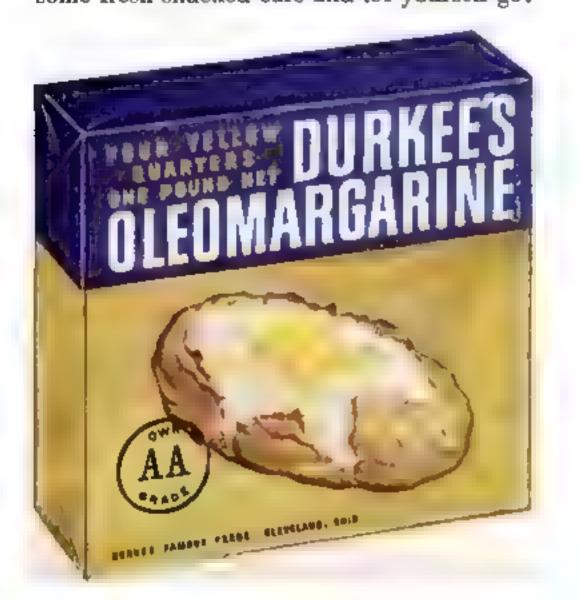

His first wife died in 1946; in 1947 he married Joan Blondell, and was divorced in 1950. He does most of his business by phone (bill: $2,000 a month), smokes 65¢ cigars (bill: $13 a day) and for years was a truly spectacular gambler (bets: $500,000 a year). He is now reformed—except, of course, for A Night in Venice, which Broadway considers one of the biggest gambles of his life.

For you do not dwell in marble halls or drafty mansion. Your home has walls of glass. Your kitchen is an engineering miracle. Your clothes and your furniture are beautifully functional. You work easily; play hard. And now-now a fine car keeps in step with your living. There has never been a motorcar like this before.

It has a rare beauty that is eminently at home with mid-century living. Beauty of line and form, not of ornamentation, nor of pompous size. It is functional beauty that works for a living; the loveliness of great stretches of gleaming glass that let you see - of clean lines that aid your driving. It is the beauty, too, of effortless handling, of magnificently easy power.

And so—there has never been a reception like this for a fine car. In city after city, department stores have grouped new Lincolns with outstanding examples of modern living. WATCHING A BONANZA, Connie Mack sits on Shibe Park stairs, instead of revenue-producing seat, to see Shantz, club's biggest asset, in action.

TINY "JUMBO" Shantz appears even smaller beside Ray Murray, 6' 3\2" second-string catcher, as they watch a foul in pre-game batting practice.

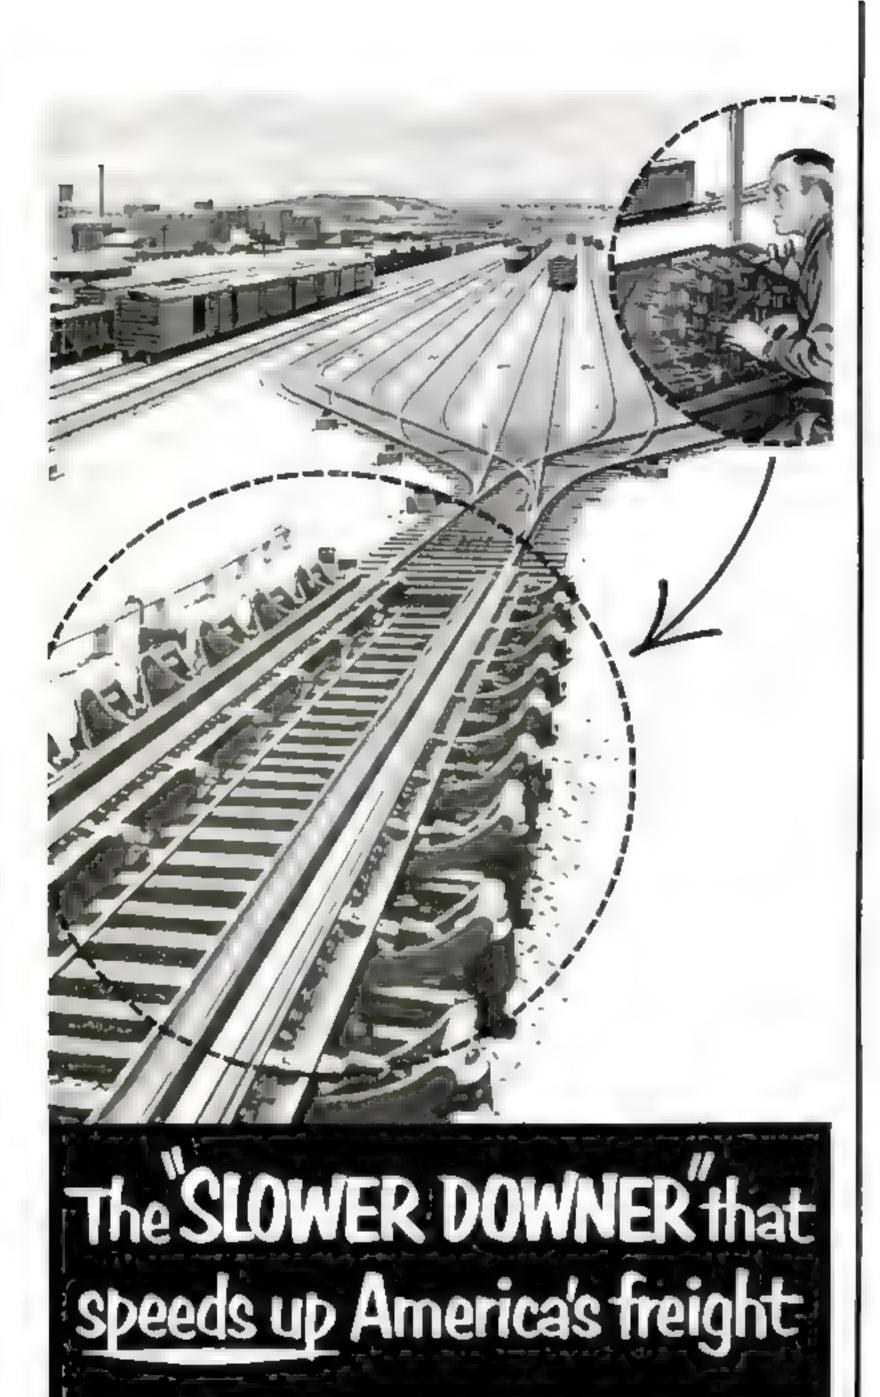

LITTLE PITCHER WITH BIG WINS

Bobby Shantz leads big leagues

Beside the conventionally husky form of almost any of his Philadelphia Athletica teammates, Robert Clayton Shantz looks small enough to be—and sometimes actually is mistaken for—the bat boy. At 143 pounds and 5'7" in height, "Jumbo," as the A's call him, is the smallest pitcher in the major leagues. But as the 1952 season passed the halfway mark last week, the records showed that out on the pitcher's mound little Bobby Shantz was just about the biggest thing in baseball.

For a sixth place club with less than 35 victories altogether, Shantz had won an amazing 14 games and lost only three. He was causing the club's venerable Connie Mack to revise his estimates of what makes a pitcher great. Connie's great pitchers—Grove, Waddell, Earnshaw, Coombs—have been big men, six-footers. Five years ago, after a scout bewilderedly complained, "Shantz is too small... but beats everyone," Connie paid the young busher's $1.25 bus ticket from Pottstown, Pa., signed him, sent him to a farm team.

In his big league debut Shantz pitched nine no-hit-no-run innings in relief, but after that lost more often than he won—until late last year. Then, for no reason he knows, he caught fire, won 10 of his next 12 games. So far in 1952 he has been almost unbeatable, because, he explains diffidently, his catcher "knows more about the hitters now." Last week, in the annual All Star game (next page), hitle Jumbo got a chance to show the National League why Connie Mack, who has turned down $250,000 for him, is now saying, "It could be that Bobby will turn out . . . the greatest of them all."

• It's called a car retarder - but actually it keeps freight moving faster through scores of big railroad yards, where incoming cars are switched and made up into trains headed for many different destinations.

In these yards, ears are shoved over the "hump" and roll downhill by gravity into the network of tracks on which new trains are made up. The cars are carefully controlled and accurately directed by a man in a tower overlooking the yard. By remote control, he operates the retarders, which press against the edges of the wheels to govern downhill speed of cars, and the switches, which turn each car into its proper track.

Thus trains get made up more quickly, freight rolls on its way sooner, and you and the rest of the nation get better service.

This is just one more example of how railroads use the appliances and methods of modern research in performing their big and essential job of meeting America's transportation needs with efficiency, economy and dispatch.

G.E. BENDS FLUORESCENT LIGHT TO GIVE IT NEW USES

General Electric Circline lamp comes in 8 and 12 inch sizes

A circular light bulb developed by General Electric is bringing fluorescent light to every room of the house—and finding many other uses too.

By compressing a 37-inch tube into a 12-inch circle (and 25 inches into 8), it makes fluorescent compact enough to be used in decorator type floor and table lamps. Wall and ceiling fixtures can be almost as small as incandescent types.

It lets you have fluorescent's soft, cool, diffused light beside your favorite reading chair, to encircle your shaving or make-up mirror, to light your desk. You can use it for decorative effects. It can replace your incandescent ceiling fixtures without requiring more space or extensive re-wiring.

A 16-inch Circline is now under development and will be available soon.

IN PORTABLE LAMPS, G-E Circline is often used together with incandescent bulbs.

IN SMALL KITCHENS, 22-watt 8-inch Circline nested in 32-watt 12-inch make good ceiling fixtures.

IN INDUSTRIAL USE, G-E Circlines in special fixtures solve difficult inspection lighting problems.

Science reveals new ingredient for easy shaves

Wonderful substance outdoes lanolin, makes beard softer, lubricates, protects skin—and is available now

For years science has searched for a shaving preparation that would enhance the wetting action of soap and at the same time have a beneficial emollient effect on the skin—a characteristic not present in most shaving soap.

Chemists at The J. B. Williams Co. undertook extensive research into the problem. We asked ourselves this question; Would use of the free sterols present in "Extract of Lanolin" provide the improved shaving preparation we sought to make?

Advantages of Extract of Lanolin

Even though present in comparatively small percentages, "Extract of Landin" can efficiently increase the water penetration of the shaving cream. Imparting moisture to the heard is, as dermatologists know, essential in wet shaving.

The free sterols of extract of lanolin can penetrate the waxy coating of the skin with great hydrophilic effect. This is because it is a natural product closely resembling the skin surface fat.

How it works

"Extract of Lanohn" in shaving cream forms a firm on the surface of each lather bubble and, due to its surface-active nature, tends to penetrate the pores and recesses of the skin—providing the following beneficial effects:

- 1. The beard becomes wet, easier to shave.
- The rigid emollient film can act as a Inbricant for the rozor, helping to prevent alramon, or "rozor burn," by reducing fraction to a minimum
- There is minimum tendency to leave the akin with less of the protective sterols than present before shaving. Natural protective skin-cooling isn't "shaved away."

We then wanted to know how dermatologists themselves felt. 90% of the doctors surveyed approved the idea with enthusiasm.

Result: a superior product

As a result of our findings, and the approval of dermatologists, The J. B. Williams Company is now offering our Luxury Shaving Cream with "Extract of Landin."

We don't wish to make extravagant claims; but we do say that our shaving preparation, through qualities made possible with "Extract of Lanolin," will cut to a minimum the skin irritation due to shaving. This, we believe, should be of particular interest to you, as a man who wants better shaves.

We're so sure you'll become a steady user of Williams that we make you this FREE offer:

Send your name and address and get a free guest-size tube of Williams Luxury Shaving Cream with "Extract of Landin"... enough for three weeks' trial. For your free tube, write: The J. B. Williams Co., Dept. LS-6, Glastonbury, Connecticut. (Offer good only in U.S.A. and Canada.)

IN BARE DEFEAT, Shantz walks downcast from the employes' exit of Shibe Park after a combination of chest muscle pains and Yankee base hits sent him to the showers for his third loss of the year. The Yanks scored four runs off him in four innings, far above his season's earned run average of about 1.75 per game. Shantz has a sneaky fast ball, a sweeping curve and a deceptive change of pace, but it is hairline control which makes them so effective. He also fields so well that the Yankees' Casev Stengel wryly complains that the Athletics present an unfair five-man infield when Shantz is in the lineup.

NEW LUXURY SHIP, THE BIGGEST EVER BUILT IN THIS COUNTRY, HAS ALREADY PROVED HERSELF THE FASTEST LINER AFLOAT

The $70 million $8. United States, the world's newest liner, is the biggest strip ever built in the U.S. Above, in a painting Jone for Life, she is shown in cross section against a background of lower Manhattan. At right her main areas are located She is 990 feet long, grosses 53 000 tons has 12 decks and carries 2,000 passengers, as most half of them in tirst class. nonship flooring on the play decks. The United States is, all in all, the most huxurious liner affoat and, for many reasons, is a seagoing miracle.

She was built by the Newport News Ship-building Co. in less than 30 months, whereas it took more than four years to build the Queen Elizabeth. She carries virtually as many passengers as the Elizabeth, the world's largest ship, yet weighs an astonishing 20,000 tons less. She contains more aluminum than any other thing ever built anywhere any time and is the first big ship to be completely air-conditioned and fireproof. In a matter of days she can be converted to a troop carrier accommodating 14,000 men.

But what will most firmly establish the Unit of States as a nautical wonder is her speed. With her turbines running at only two thirds of capacity she has gone 34 knots. The Queen Mary got up to 33 knots when she established the transatlantic crossing record. The United States's speed is accounted for in part by high pressure. turbines, the most powerful in the world. Other speed factors are her slim hull, net lightness, her double set of twin propellers. As slower speeds only the forward pair are used. But at the signal for more speed the aft screws cut in, much like the over frive on a modern car.

Just how fast she can go is not yet known and, when it is, will become a military secret. A lot of shipwise people are sure that if she lets out, the United States will be the first ocean liner to pass 40 knots. And some suspect she will reach 45

SHIP'S FUN ON RECORD RUN

On the crossing, the passengers on the United States never lacked a ready topic of conversation (the speed) or something to do it idle moments (go to the bulletin board to read the latest log). They enjoyed watching the most noted passenger (Margaret Truman), worried about their bon voyage presents (there were so many it took over half the trip to distribute all of them) and exchanged opinions on the air conditioning (it was fine). And they kept asking veteran crossers what they thought of the vibration (not bad, considering the speed).

BONED AND BLOOMERED BATHING SUIT SCORES A TARDY STYLE SPLASH

New bathing suit creations, which usually go on display in May, are often on the marked-down racks by July. But this year a late starter, not brought out until July, provided Lord & Taylor of New York with an unexpected and sensational spurt in swim suit sales. This was the suit above designed by Rose Marie Reid who, with waist boning and bouncy bloomers, shaped the satin lastex one-piece—an American favorite—to the extravagant curves of an Edwardian hourglass. Europe's designers this year have offered nothing so revolutionary as this, but some tricky and tempting beach gadgetry (next page) has appeared on the Riviera.

His Phosphorous Matches Climaxed Thousands of Years of History

Man first discovered fire thousands of years ago —but as late as 830 he had not yet discovered how to stort a fire quickly and effortlessly. The best answer was still the chunsy, combersome flint-and-steel "tribler fighter" adapted from the flintlock pistol.

Then Dr. Sauria, experimenting with phosphorus, recognized a good thing. He created the original phosphorous "match"—the first efficient, quick-firing, reliable method of creating a flame by friction.

He gave his invention to the world, and reaped universal arcfaim. In a few years, the manufacture of matches executed that of any other manmade product, Loday, Americans alone consume over 57 million per hom?

THE ARTIST puts finishing touches on a painting in her lap as she sits beside an album of old family photos from Kentucky on which she leans for her inspiration.

YOUNG MARY BRUCE, aged 5, posed in 1882 with doll and washtub seen in painting (opposite).

'Grandma' Sharon

OLD LADY RECALLS OLD KENTUCKY HOME

A couple of years ago Mary Bruce Sharon, a comfortable widow who lives in New Haven, started to jot down recollections of her childhood in Kentucky, along with recipes of the dishes that used to make her childish mouth water. From there, as she reports it, it was only a step to making drawings, and then gouaches in which she relived her childhood memories. Her son-in-law, a painter of the modern school, encouraged her to keep on, arranged shows for her in Cannes. France and in New York. Now, at 74, Mrs. Sharon, whose work critics have called "fresh and enchanting," has staked out a place for herself in the field previously monopolized by 91-year-old Mrs. Anna Mary Robertson ("Grandma") Moses. As a result Mrs. Sharon, who has no grandchildren, must resign herself to being called Grandma Sharon.

Like Grandma Moses, Mrs. Sharon bathes her work in the bright, naive nostalgia of a world long dead and gone. It is orderly, with lively patterns reminiscent of old samplers. It is a more stately world than the one Moses shows. The children are starched, legions of servants wait on elaborate feasts, characters like Grandpa and Rebel Cousin Tom move stiffly in comfortable pride through a little girl's paradise, a Kentucky plantation of the 1880s.

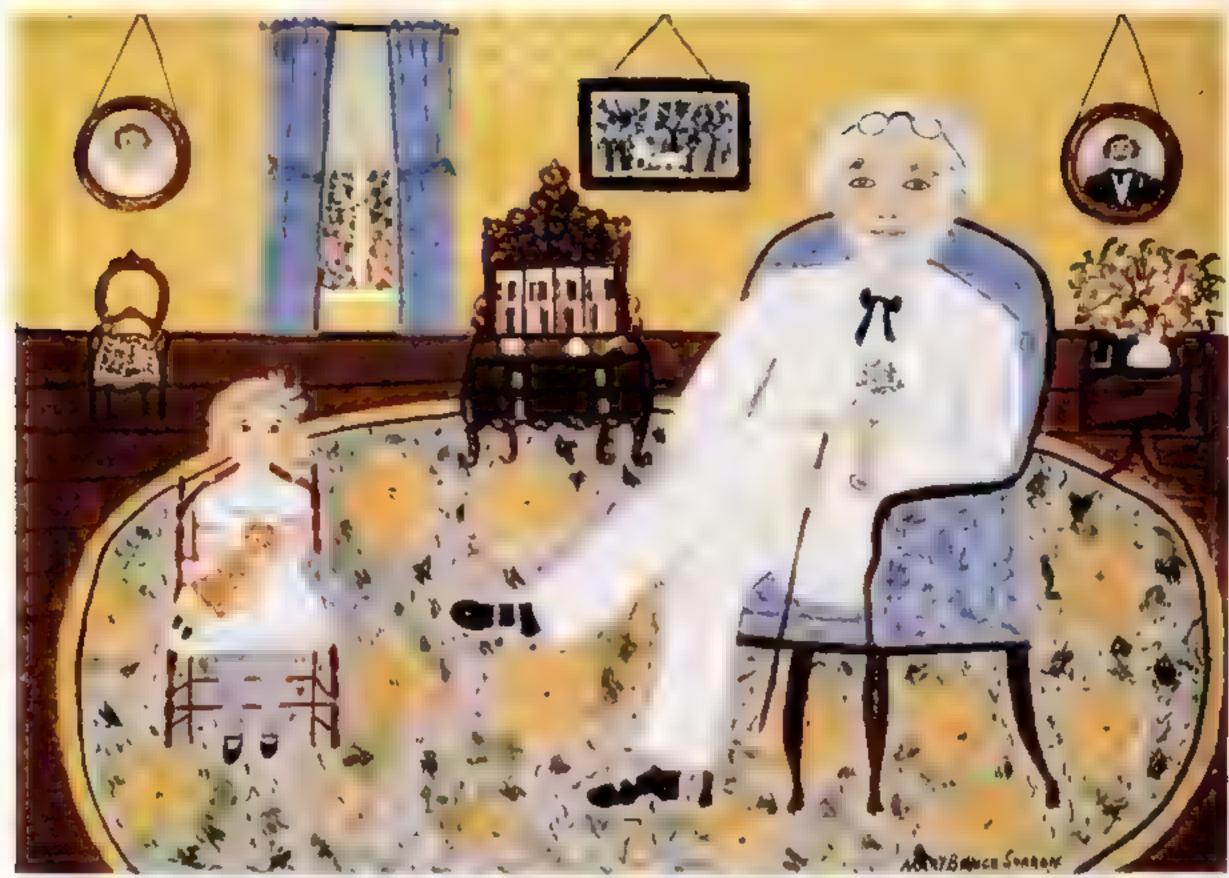

MAY-DAY PARTY was held for Mary Bruce when, at age of 9, she visited her great punt in Flemingsberg, Kv. The celebration was attended by cousins who Found...in fresh oranges... a new wholly different health factor...

The Protopectins

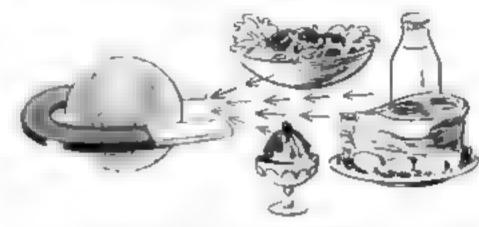

By improving your "digestive climate," the protopectins help you get more goodmore of the essentials such as vitamins and minerals—from all the food you eat!

The protopectins are found mainly in the meaty soluds of the orange—the walls of the segments and juice sacs. These remarkable substances are now being given new importance by autritionists everywhere. This is why:—

We all plan our family meals to include the food elements we need for energy and good health—particularly the vitamins and minerals. But in these times of high speed and high pressure, too many of us fail to give our digestive systems a fair chance. We eat well, but often could be better nourished!

The protopectins work to correct this. By improving your "digestive climate," by "normalizing" the digestive tract and making it more efficient, the protopectins help you absorb more of the non-caloric food essentials such as vitamins and minerals. You get more good from the same meals!

... Yet the protopectins do not lead to weight gain!

This remarkable, newly recognized nutrition factor, the protopectins, can mean better nourishment for your family, too. Better nourishment is a key to greater well-being... to greater work-output, a keener mind, improved complexion, increased resistance...and to sound, sturdy growth for children. Let whole fresh oranges be the "boosters" that help make your carefully planned meals do your family the greatest possible good!

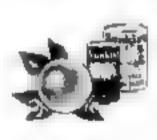

What to do: Eat an orange a day

Serve each member of the family Sunkist Oranges every day in some favorite way. This gives them their needed vitamin C. But remember that the protopectins are found mostly in the meaty solids ... so be sure they peel and eat at least one orange a day. When you eat oranges you get all the health nature put there.

Set a regular time to eat oranges... with meals, between meals or at bedtime. Include a Sunkist Orange in the lunch box.

California oranges provide a maximum amount of protopectins. Sunkist Oranges, carefully chosen for quality, are the finest of the California crop.

Sunkist brings you all three Sunkist is the only national brand that brings you all three... fresh oranges, canned orange juice and frozen orange juice... each the finest of its kind.

THIS WAS IN FINE SHAPE

When Wish You Were Here opened everybody was delighted by a spectacular scene that had a $28,000 pool sunk in the stage and made visible by a cleverly constructed mirror (nght). But entics were disappointed in most of the new musical-doubly so because so much had been expected, it was adapted from Arthur Koher's affectionately remembered comedy, Having Wonderful Time; it was co-authored and directed by Joshua Logan who was similarly involved in South Pacific. Faced with a gloomy Broadway prognosis, Logan and Kober set out to make their ailing show a healthy hit In a major job of play-doctoring, they rewrote six scenes, had them in the show in five days.

FOR AN AILING SHOW

Speedy play doctors bring new life to spectacular musical, 'Wish You Were Here'

BUT THIS HAD TO BE REMEDIED

The chief ailment in Wish You Were Here was the love story, a romance involving Teddy Stern, a guest at Camp Karefree in the Catskills, and Chick, a college boy waiter (Patricia Marand and Jack Cassidy, nght). In the original version Teddy heartlessly broke off her engagement with a middle-aged suitor and took up with Cluck. The play doctors changed this, Now Teddy, trying to remain true to her fiance, falls helplessly in love despite berself. She emerges as a more sympathetic herome, and the story takes on an honest tenderness. Audiences now pronounce the show an entertaining summer musical, the box office is doing better, and the patient has a brighter chance of survival

THE RELLCTANT CANDIDATE, apparently unruffled by the hertic events which have been swirling around his head sits it out under an oak tree at his farm.

ADLAI STEVENSON

Democrats' best foot is reluctant to put himself forward

While the Republicans were making all the noise at their convention last week, an event of possibly equal political importance was going on without a sound inside the mind of the quiet, dignified patrician man shown here boling under a tree. Governor Adlai Stevenson of Illinois was thinking about becoming a candidate for the presidency of the United States and the nation was being treated to the rare sight of a rare man who seemed honestly not to wai t the job. Aithough many high placed Democrats still considered him the indispensable man and are still working hard to keep the machinery set for a Stevenson draft, the governor lumself continued to act as if he wouldn't care much if the draft blew itself out.

Stevenson could solve a lot of problems for the Democrats. The party regulars do not like Senator Kefauver, for all his record at garriering delegates. Senators Russell of Georgia and Kerr of Oklahoma are regional candidates without a real prayer of victory. Averell Harriman is considered by most Democrat professionals to be far too withdrawn and inarticulate for a burly burly campaign. But Stevenson, although a newcomer to politics, is an acknowledged expert at it—and a gentleman and scholar to boot. He would be an impressive candidate for any party in any year, and this is one time the Democrats feel they must put their best foot forward. As for why the best foot hesitates, see the following eight pages GRANDFATHER, also named Adlai Stevenson, leaves Illinois in 1893 to serve as vice president. Governor's father is at right.

FATHER, a world traveler before settling down, wears nobleman's costume in Japan,

FOUR GENERATIONS of governor's family sat together around 1897 for this magnificent

GREAT-GRANDFATHER on mother's sule was Jesse Fell, one of the first and greatest citizens of Bloomington, Ill. A lawyer, realtor and horticulturist, he helped lay out the city and planted many of the beautiful trees which still shade its streets. He founded nearby Illinois State Normal University and the city's first newspaper -which has become famed and prosperous Pantagraph. The paper is still stanchly Republican, as was Fell, even though Democratic Governor Stevenson has inherited a one-fourth interest and derives much of his income from it.

HIS MIDWEST PAST:

To many American politicians, politics is a livelihood and a way of ascending the social ladder; it is one way that a boy from a poor family can become famous and sometimes even rich. To Adlai Stevenson it is no such thing. His family has been rich and famous as far back as he or anyone else can remember; he has an independent income of around $40,000 a year and would never have had to work at all, much less enter the often sweaty shops of politics.

For four generations back the governor's forebears have been aristocrats in the best Midwestern tradition. The family album is full of photographs like these—distinguished men in black broadcloth and stiff collars, women with the fine, gentle features of Midwest quality folks, magnificent old homesteads. The governor's ancestors helped found Bloomington, Ill.; they planted its trees and built its schools; they carried on its law practice and its politics and published its newspapers. They sent their children off to college, and then the children returned to carry on the family traditions—to serve, generation after generation, as Bloomington's first citizens and the custodians of its culture.

Adlai Stevenson is named after a grandfather (right) who was a prominent Democratic politician of the 19th Century and who FELL HOUSE is one of the dignified old homes which were a background for Adlai's youth. It stands intact except that the cupola has given way to TV aerial.

finally achieved the vice presidency under President Cleveland. On his mother's side the family history goes back to the emment Jesse Fell (left). Adiai grew up among the fine houses shown below, spent his summers among the wealthy old Midwestern families who vacationed in Charlevoix, Mich.

Then he went off, as seemed quite fitting, to Princeton. He was bright but not especially interested in his books; he became managing editor of the Daily Princetonian and planned to continue as a journalist after graduation. Instead his father persuaded him to go on to law school at Harvard and Northwestern. Until 1933 he was a young socialite lawyer moving in Chicago's best North Shore circles. Then he got interested in public affairs, began commuting to Washington for assignments in the Roosevelt administration. He was in the old Agricultural Adjustment Administration, served as special assistant to Secretary of the Navy Knox, as assistant to Secretaries of State Stettinius and Byrnes. He helped organize the United Nations, worked with the U.S. delegation in London. But he was never an office seeker until 1948 when his party drafted him to run for governor. At that point it developed, to everyone's surprise, that aristocratic Mr. Stevenson had the common touch as well.

ADLAI THE FIRST, besides being vice president, also served as congressman and assistant postmaster general. Like great-grandfather Fell, he was an early Bloomington settler and lawyer. But he was a stanch Democrat, and his son Lewis, the present Adlar's father, was a Democratic politician after him, When Lewis married into the Republican Fell family, newspapers all over the country called it a "triumph of love over politics." The present Adlai furthered the compromise by following father's politics and joining his mother's Unitarian Church.

STEVENSON HOUSE in Bloomington, owned by Vice President Adlai Stevenson, is replete with Victorian gimerackery. Here governor's father grew up.

GREEN HOUSE, in Danville, Ky., is another old family landmark. It was the birthplace of Dr. Lewis Green, whose daughter married Adlai Stevenson the First.

THE FAMILY HOME TOWN

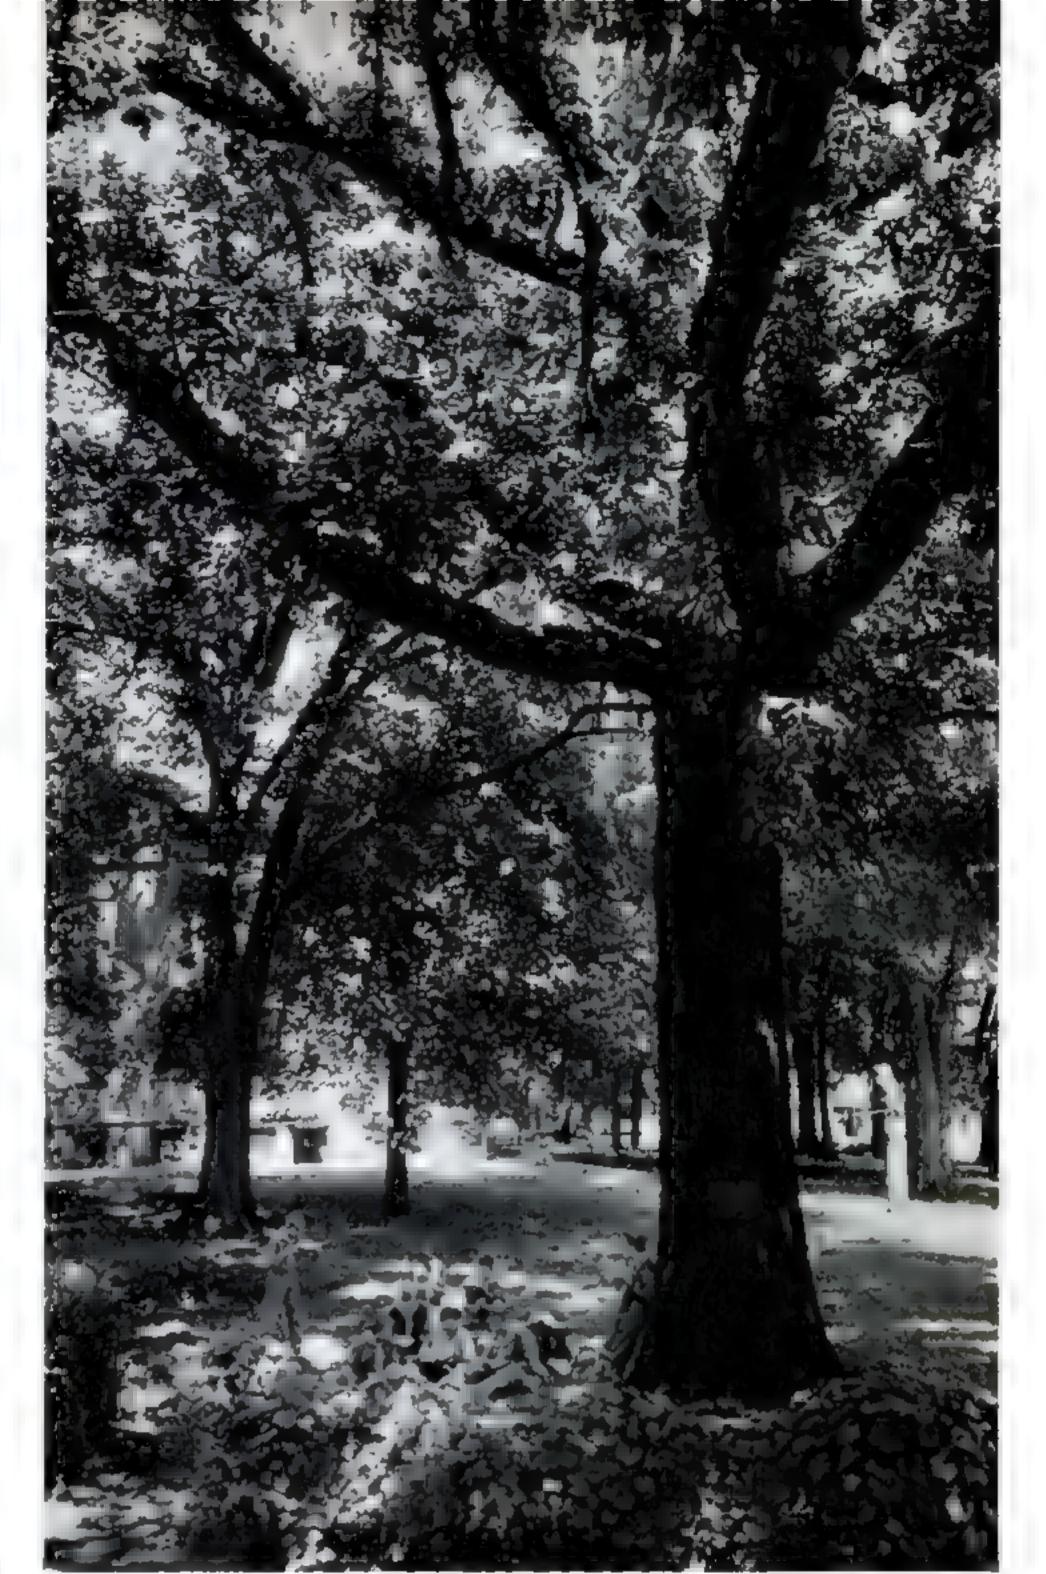

All over the city of Bloomington, with its 34,000 population and nearby university of 2,000 students, the signs of the family history persist. An early business landmark (above) was put up by a Stevenson and bore the name on its ancient facade. A tree stands marked with a plaque dedicated to one of the governor's forebears; a street and a bus line are named after them. And in Bloomington lives the oldest surviving member of the governor's line (opposite page) with more of the proud mementos of the family's distinguished past.

Stevenson spent his youth in Bloomington and worked on the Pantagraph; now, as governor, he dwells 60 miles away in the capital at Springfield, a town so much like Bloomington that he feels very much at home there. The government of Illinois has become the great passion of his life. Before his administration the state was run about as badly as possible. Eight years of Republican Governor Dwight Green had been as much as any state could stand-and the Democrats who put up Stevenson, strictly from hunger for victory, were a motley crew who threatened to give him even more trouble than his enemies. The governor has been busy ever since cleaning up gambling. stopping the pay-offs and rooting out the spoils system. In Illinois he knows what he is doing -and he has done it. Even the machine Democrats, who expected to hate him, like him now.

HIS DIVORCED WIFE, WITH FIRST SON IN 1936

A DIVORCE, A DILEMMA

One thing is strangely missing in the governor's life—he has no first lady. He lives a bachelor's lonely existence in the vast spaces of the executive mansion, except in the summertime when his three sons come home from school to visit him. On occasions when he requires an official hostess at the mansion, the job falls by default to his married sister.

It was presumably the governorship that cost him his wife. She was Ellen Borden of a wealthy Chicago family, and they had been married for almost 20 years when he was elected. Devotion to public office does not always mix with devotion to private life. Friends say Mrs. Stevenson tired of his increasingly long hours and his growing preoccupation and solitude. In 1949 she divorced him.

This is a common American tragedy; it has happened in nearly 7.5 million U.S. families in the last 25 years. But a divorce is still a political liability, and no divorced man has ever gone to the White House. It may be—the governor himself is not the kind of man to say—that this is one reason he prefers not to run.

FIRST LADY BY PROXY of governor's administration is sister Elizabeth (back to camera), whose married name is Mrs. Ernest Ives but who is better known as "Buffie," Here she presides over luncheon

ON THE TENNES COURT Stevenson, at 52 no longer covers so much ground as when shimmer. But he still plays better than average.

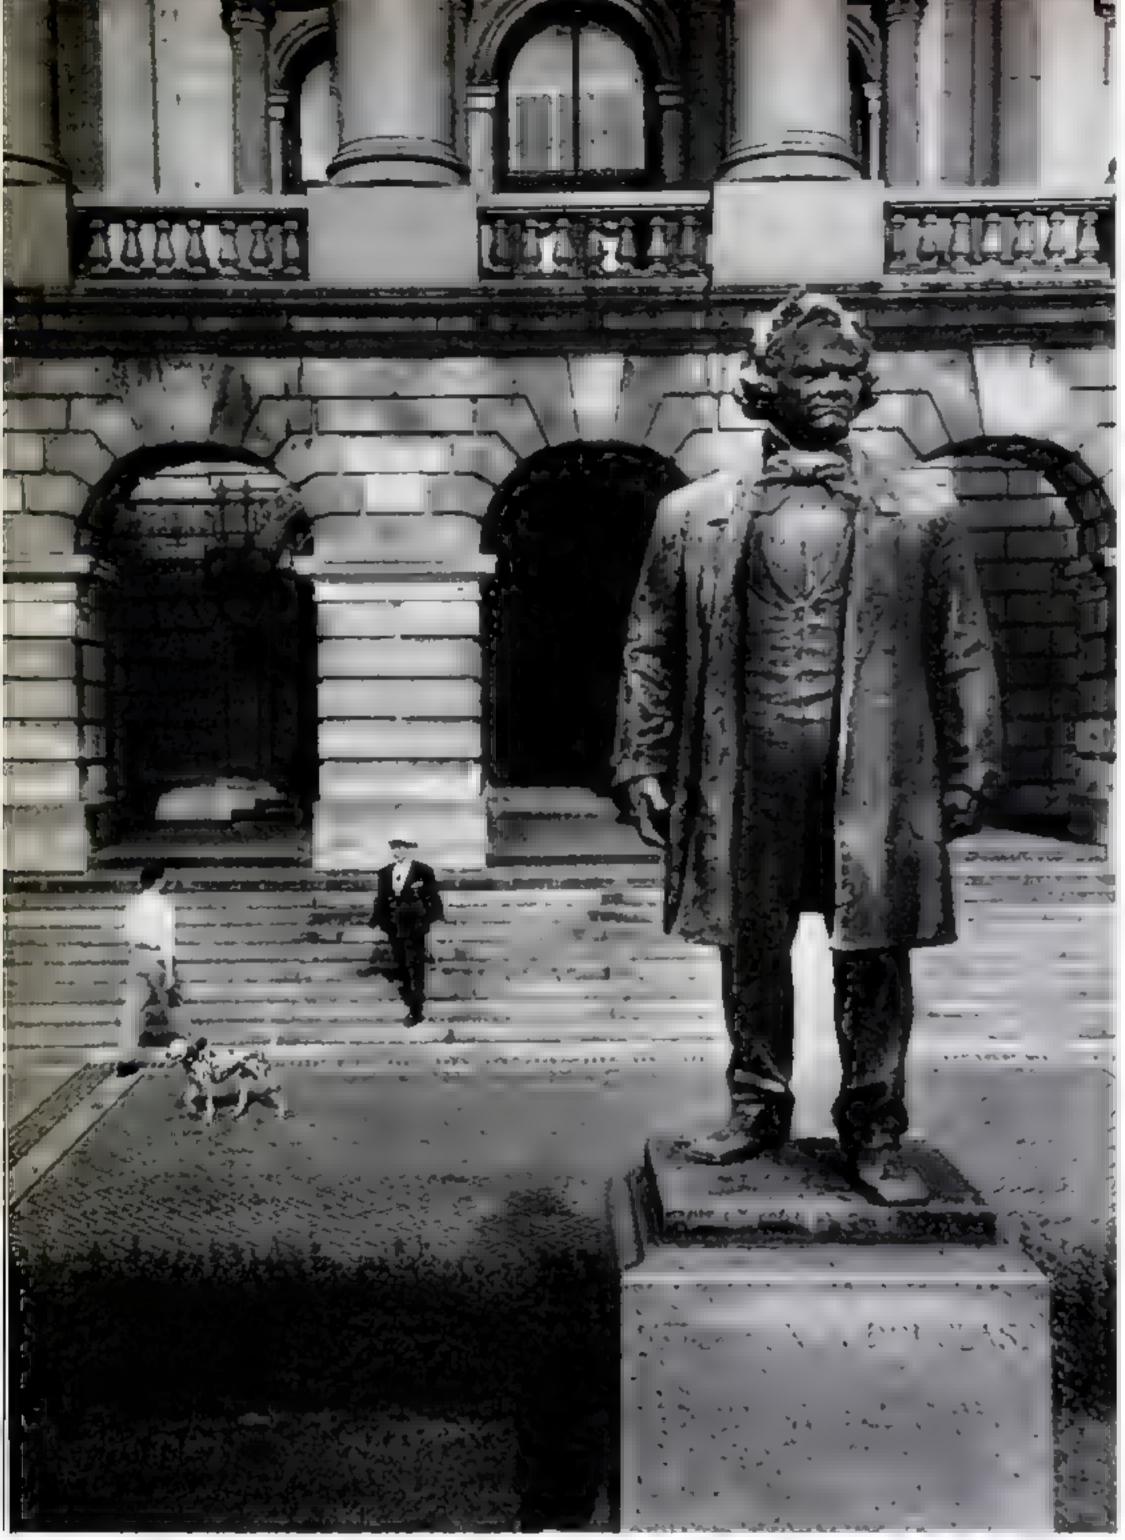

"SKULL PRACTICE" is governor's term for his weekly conference with bright young assistants.

LONELY LIFE AS GOVERNOR

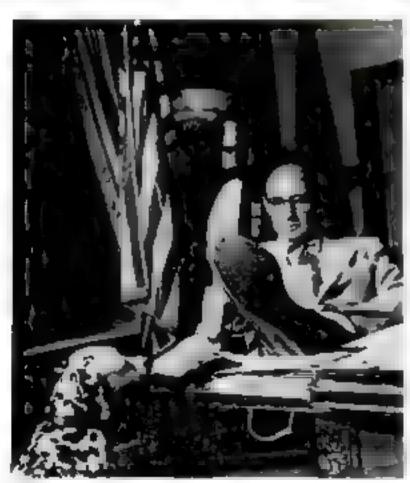

Governor Stevenson, though wealthy, is a frugal man; he has bought only one suit in four years and saves money by wearing converted golf shoes (helow, left). He is abstemious about liquor (one drink a day) and frivolous conversation. He works from 9 a.m. until dinner, then from dinnertime until he goes to sleep. He has gathered about him a remarkably bright and youthful staff (above), but on the decisions that only he can make he prefers to work out his own answers and keep his own counsel.

Thus no one really knew, as late as last week, what he would do about the nomination that could so easily fall into his lap. His acquaintances knew he was agonized over the decision, that he hated the prospects yet also hated the thought of being derelict in duty. In all probability he was turning the problem over and over in his mind, slowly and painfully.

One hint of his possible decision came a few minutes after the photo on the opposite page was made. A call came through from Jake Arvey, Democrat boss of Chicago and Stevenson's chief rooter for the presidency. They talked on the phone for nearly two hours. And then the next time Stevenson made a public utterance, at the recent governors' conference in Houston, he made a significant statement. If a draft developed, he said, "I will decide what to do at that time in the light of the conditions then existing." It wasn't a yes—but it wasn't a no, and it was as far as Adlai Stevenson has ever gone toward being receptive.

EtGHT HUNGRY LIONS stalk after carcass dragged by truck across an East African plain. Author Hunter makes hone do tricks like this for his camera safaris. His favorite client: New Jerseyite Walter Sykes, who photographed this scene and the charging rhino (p. 94) in 1937, when he was only 16 years old.

THE GREAT LION KILLER

He went into the bush with untrained mongrels to end a terror created by the marauding cats

by JOHN A. HUNTER

HEN I first came to Kenya, the game covered the plains as far as a man could see. I hunted hons where towns now stand, and shot elephants from the engine of the first railroad to cross the country. In the span of my 65 years the jungles have turned into farmland and savage tribes have become factory workers. I have had a little to do with this change myself, for the government employed me to clear dangerous beasts out of areas that were opened to cultivation. This was in the day's work for me; yet I have always been a sportsman. I would rather hear the crack of a rifle or the bang of a shotgun than listen to the finest orchestra.

I cannot say that I did not enjoy hunting; and looking back, I truly believe that in most cases the big game had as much chance to kill me as I had to kill them.

I am one of the last of the oldtime "white hunters" (a term used in Africa to distinguish white professionals from sportsmen and native hunters). The events I saw can never be relived. No one will ever see again the great elephant herds, and old bulls carrying 150 pounds of ivory in each tusk. No one will ever again hear the shrill hunting cries of the Masai as their spearmen swept the bush after cattle-killing lions. Few indeed will be able to say they have broken into country never before seen by a white man. The old Africa has passed and I saw it go.

DEAD LION was shot by Sykes's brother Howard, at 14. Though complete records are not kept on hons. Hunter (left) believes it set record (11' 71/2").

I began my career as a professional hunter by shooting lions for their hides. Lion hides sold for about $5 each in Mombasa and leopard skins for nearly as much. At that time there were plenty of lions around the Tsavo area, some 200 miles southeast of Nairobi. Lions were regarded as vermin, for they killed cattle and some were not averse to picking up stray natives.

I knew next to nothing about these great cats when i set out with an old Mauser and a single native boy to make my mark as a famous hon hunter. But I quickly learned that to hunt lions you must understand how they think and behave. A lion is a cat and cats are curious beasts. They are temperamental creatures and highly subject to moods. Weather has a profound effect on them. Rainy weather makes them nervous, energetic and keen. Very dry weather tends to make them lazy and indifferent. Lions hunt mainly at night. Darkness seems to act on them as a stimulant. The darker the night, the more likely lions are to be about; I never heard of a lion making a kill during the full moon. There are many cases of men meeting lions in the bush and scaring the animals off by shouting at them; yet I have also seen a lion charge a truck and nearly knock it over in his attempts to get at the men inside.

Lions are fairly sociable animals and like

peculiar to women

Whether you are a "solid" vacationer or whether you take it in scraps and pieces and long week-ends, there are certain problems you must face if you are a woman. You know what these problems are! You know what we are talking about! . . . But do you know about a little product called Tampax (doctor-invented and very absorbent), which is used internally? By wearing this kind of monthly protection instead of the external type, a lot of your problems will vanish into thin air.

You can accept invitations with a light heart and without too much "calculating"—if you use Tampax. It will let you enjoy a freedom you haven't had since your girlhood days, because Tampax needs none of those belts and pins that constantly remind you of something unpleasant.

You can reduce your luggage if you travel by plane or close-packed convertible. You can even go on a bicycling tour, for Tampax is many, many times smaller than the external kind. A full month's supply may be carried in your purse, so you can be always prepared.

You can face your hostess with a calm conscience at such times, for Tampax presents no disposal difficulties, even with the unruly plumbing found in many summer cottages. Made of pure surgical cotton, Tampax comes to you in slender applicators — very neat, dainty and efficient.

You can appear on the beach in a close-fitting swim suit (wet or dry) with not a bulge or a wrinkle to betray your Tampax. Ditto in the scantiest play suit. Naturally! because it's worn internally! For the same reason, no odor or chafing is possible.

You can buy this Tampax at drug stores and notion counters everywhere. Make a note of the name—Tampax. Millions of women use it monthly. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

CHARGING RHINO had to be killed to save Walter Sykes, who kept photographing. Hunter dropped it with one shot, then paced distance (bottom) to find it fell only nine feet away. Experiences he relates in this article, prepared with the help of Daniel Mannix, American author and big-game hunter, will be part of a book, Hunter, to be published by Harper & Brothers in October.

to collect in groups. A group of lions is called a pride, an archaic term that was forgotten for centuries but has been revived in Africa. I have seen as many as 20 lions in a pride, ranging from old males down to newborn cubs playing with their mothers' tails. Lions are polygamous, and as each lioness comes into season the lion will retire with her for a few days and then rejoin the pride. There may be several males in a pride, each with his own harem, but there is generally one head male and the others defer to him.

Although it would not be true to say that they hunt in packs, there is a certain organization about their work. The actual killing is frequently done by the lionesses or by young males. The patriarch often holds back, directing the business and only throwing in his own weight and strength when necessary. A pride of lions on the hunt communicates with its members by deep grunts that have a strangely ventriloquial quality. It is almost impossible to tell where the noise comes from. Lions very seldom roar; I have heard the true roar only a few times in my life. They must have an amazing ability to see during the darkest night, and I am convinced that they hunt by sight rather than smell. They count on stampeding the game by their hunting grunts and sending it toward a spot where the other hons are waiting. Of course, if they see their quarry they will stalk and leap upon it much as any cat does. Although a lion is absolutely noiseless when stalking, he makes a surprising amount of noise when he runs, his big pads thumping distinctly as he leaps along the ground.

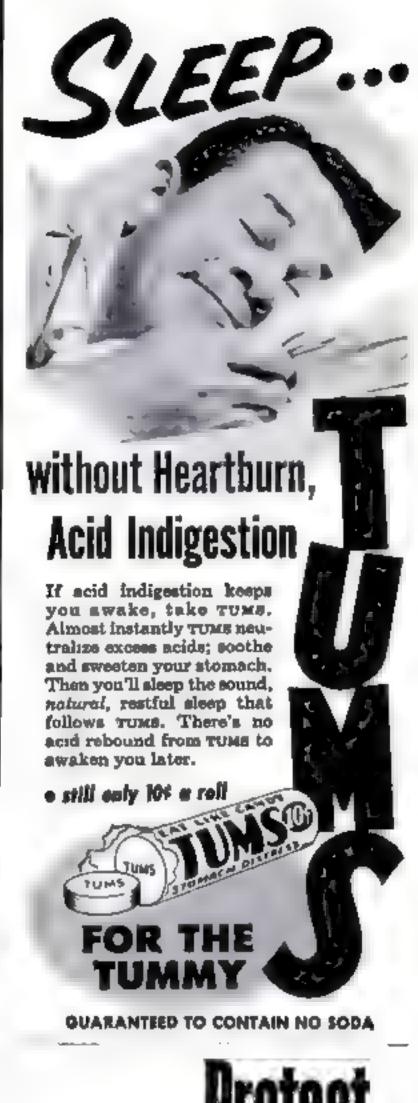

There are few sights in nature more terrible than that of a charging lion. He comes at a speed close to 40 miles per hour, hitting top pace the instant he takes off. If a stalking lion can get to within 50 yards of the swiftest antelope, the antelope is doomed. A man standing only 30 yards or so from a charging lion cannot afford to miss. A full-grown lion weighs some 450 pounds, and in a few bounds he is on you, with fangs slashing and hind claws ripping you open.

I became a lion exterminator one spring in the middle '20s. Captain A. T. A. Ritchie, head of the Kenya Game Department, called me into his office and laid before me one of the most remarkable offers ever made to a professional hunter.

In the center of Kenya lies a great tableland which is the home of a warlike tribe of herdsmen named the Masai. The Masai are a nation of spearmen. They scorn the bow and arrow as the tool of cowards who are afraid to close with their enemies. The young warriors of the tribe, called the moran, subsist mainly on a diet of fresh animal blood and milk. This they consider the only proper food for their fighting men.

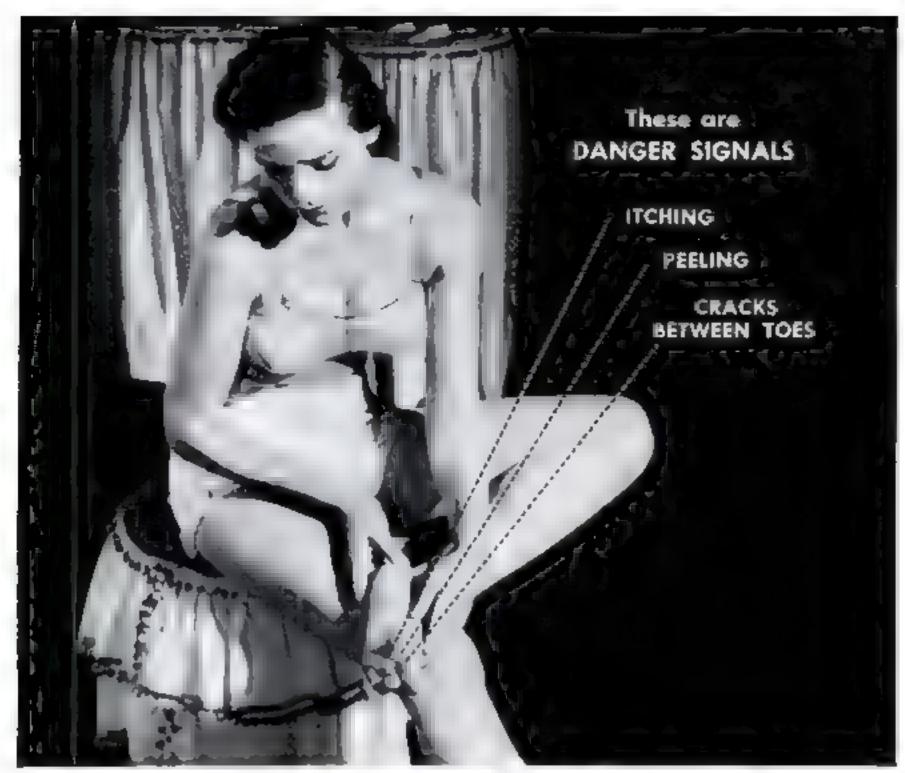

The neighboring tribes lived in terror of the Masai. None of them could stand against a Masai war party. They kill lions not with guns but with spears—a feat I had not thought possible. In the old days the Masai had lived almost completely on other tribes. But the British government finally stopped this raiding, whereupon the Masai were forced to raise more cattle as a means of livelihood. Then a terrible epidemic of rinderpest swept the district.

Z OUT OF 10 SUFFER FROM ATHLETE'S FOOT YEARLY. FOR TRIPLE-ACTION RELIEF, READ BELOW.

NOW! RELIEF FROM No. 1 SKIN DISEASE

Here's great news for you. Advertised nationally first in 1951 (after 5 years of testing), NP-27 has been making medical history ever since. Its triple-action gives America a new defense against the No. 1 skin disease, Athlete's Foot. Surveys show that the disease infects 7 out of 10 Americans each year. It causes great distress and discomfort. Now NP-27 offers a new means for combating this widespread infection. It is the recommended Athlete's Foot remedy of many chiropodists, who see more foot troubles than any other group of specialists. NP-27 is praised by many leading athletic coaches and trainers, who must keep the feet of their players in best condition. Get remarkable new triple-action NP-27 for yourself and for your family's protection.

CHIROPODISTS WARN you of "danger signals" that may show you have Athlete's Foot without knowing it! Check your feet for peeling, itching, cracks between toes and under toes, and for itching callouses on soles. These are NOT normal. Act before your condition becomes serious; use NP-27 at once, and regularly.

LEADING UNIVERSITY COACHES, as well as many chiropodists, endorse NP 27. For instance, Cornell's great coach, "Lefty" James, says: "I use NP-27 because I find it is most successful in preventing or relieving Athlete's Foot." Foot health is important to the experts; their recommendation of NP-27 is important to you.

THIS TRIPLE ACTION IS VITAL NP-27 kills the plant-like fungus (1) which is the usual cause of Athlete's Foot. It also destroys the hard-to-kill spores, or "seems" (2) from which the infecting "plants" may grow back. And it kills bacteria (3) which sometimes cause or complicate the infection. Illustrations (4), (5), and (6) are of tests which prove that NP 27 is effective against fungi, spores and bucteria. What other remedy but NP-27 does all this!

TREATMENT IS EASY NOW. Quick-noting NP-27 is pleasant to use; is non-irritating, dries rapidly; does not stain skin or clothing. Be sure to get NP-27. It is not expensive and your druggist will refund entire purchase price if you're not completely satisfied. The Norwich Pharmacal Company, Norwich, N.Y.

The lions in the area readily became scavengers. With the plains littered by the carcasses of cattle, these big cats increased greatly in numbers. Soon the Masai country was overrun with lions. When the epidemic had run its course and there were no more dead cows lying about, the lions turned on the live ones. The Masai sallied out with spear and shield to defend the precious remnants of their breeding stock, but for every hon killed, one or two of the young moran were mauled. A wound made by a hon almost invariably causes infection, for the claws of the animals are coated with a rotting film from their prey. So the Masai, under present conditions, had no solution except to appeal to the government for help.

"This is a task for an experienced hunter," Captain Ritchie told me. "We want the trouble-giving lions killed in the next three months to bring the lion population within control. You will be allowed to keep the hides as your pay."

At that time the skins of first-class, black-maned lions were bringing $100, lioness hides were worth $15, and the number you could shoot was restricted by law. Although the risks were great, it was an opportunity to make a large sum of money. My wife hilds and I had four children by this time, and it is surprising how much children cost to raise, even in Kenya.

So a week later, accompanied by a few native porters, six oxen for dragging batt and a motley pack of mongrels I had bought from a pound, I set out for Masai land.

We followed the main highway to Konza about 80 miles southeast of Nairobi, and then turned almost due west. After a day's trek we began to leave the forested country and come into the open plains.

Here was perfect grazing country. The air was clear and cool, a pleasant thing to breathe, and not a house or a road to mar the sweep of the great rolling country. Except for Hilda and the children, I would have little cared if I never returned to Nairobi, for here was Africa as God made it before the white man arrived and began to deface the country with villages and farms.

It was not long before I met my first Masai, two self-assured young moran who were out lion hunting and had seen my camp. When I told them that I had come to kill lions, they seemed rather amused at this idea and said I would have trouble killing lions with nothing but a gun. A spear was the proper weapon to use on a lion. (The Masai have a great contempt for firearms, dating back to the old days when a Masai war party had little trouble defeating Arab slave traders armed only with muzzle-loading muskets.)

Apparently to call my bluff, one of the young men told me that he knew of two hons not far from camp. His friend chimed in, saying these animals were particularly fine specimens and he would be delighted to see me have a go at them. I had not intended making my first hunt before such a critical audience. But confronted with the moran's amused contempt, I felt duty bound to do my best. I told them to lead on, and called to one of my porters to uncouple the dogs.

Low growt of warning

THE Masai led me to a drift, the dry bottom of a ravine that in the rainy season turns into a roaring torrent. The floor of the drift was covered with sand and the Masai easily picked up the lions' spoor and began tracking. The dogs trotted along, examining the strange scent doubtfully. We rounded a bend in the winding course of the drift and saw before us two lions lying stretched out on the sand like big cats. They both rose and stood glowering at us. When the dogs saw what they had been trailing, most of the pack took one horrified look and fled, yelping in panic. But four dogs of Airedale strain bravely stood their ground.

Neither the Masai nor I could spare any thought for the dogs. The two moran stood with their spears upraised waiting for the charge. A noble sight. I took quick aim for the chest of the larger cat and fired. He reared at the impact of the bullet, grunted and fell heavily on his side. His companion promptly bolted into some heavy bush on the left bank of the drift. Instantly my four Airedales charged in and began to worry the dead lion. I let them pull at the mane to their hearts' content, and when the rest of the pack gingerly returned, I encouraged them to do the same.

As we approached the bush, I heard the second lion give a low, harsh growl of warning. One of the Masai tossed a stone into the cover. The lion charged out a few feet, making a feint at one of the Airedales, and then dodged back before I could get in a shot. But I knew it would not be long now before the lion charged, so I steadied myself to meet the attack.

Suddenly the bushes swayed violently as the lion burst out and came for me. He was bunched up almost in a ball, his ears flat and his back arched. He seemed to fly through the air across the sandy bottom. One of my gallant Airedales met the charge full on and tried to seize the monster by the throat. The hon knocked him over as a child might knock over a toy.

When he was within 10 yards I fired. The bullet hit him fairly between the eyes. He dropped. In the cool morning air, a tiny curl of smoke rose from the bullet hole.

The two Masai went into a war dance of delight. The tense excitement of the charge and the thrill of seeing two fine-maned lions lying before us was too much for them. Still holding their spears, the men bent forward, thrusting out their behinds. Then they suddenly straightened up, throwing out their chests at the same time. As their ecstasy increased this curious jerky motion speeded up in tempo until they were going like pistons. This was a curious sort of emotional seizure common among the Masai and known among whites who now live with this remarkable people as "the shakes."

The fine Airedale that had tried to stop the charge now lay with a broken back. I could do nothing for him but put him out of his pain. Few dogs are fortunate enough to survive the swipe of a lion's paw. The dogs must keep out of a lion's way, forcing him to break cover by snapping and barking at him, but never taking a hold. My poor Airedale had died before he could learn the trick. I could only hope the rest would profit by his death.

News seems to travel through Africa with the speed of radio. When we returned to camp there was a crowd of young warriors waiting to greet me. I can only suppose they heard the noise of the shots and hurried to the spot. There was wild jubilation and my first two friends informed me that the crowd had come to take me to a spot where the lions were "thick as grass."

At daybreak the next morning we started off, the Masai trotting ahead with their spears. Late in the afternoon we came through the bush onto the banks of a muddy stream where a group of old men and women were watering a herd of the long-horned native cattle. It seemed I had come to the right spot, for only a few days before my arrival lions had killed six head of their precious cattle as well as two herdsmen who had tried to defend the animals.

The enthusiastic crowd conducted me to their village. I had expected to see a large cluster of thatched huts, but I was almost on top of the place before I realized it was a village at all. It looked like nothing more than an unusually thick mass of brush. The "village" was surrounded by thornbushes, piled high as a man's head, and the huts within were no higher than my chest. They were made of cow dung, plastered like clay over a wattle frame. The dung had been baked as hard as brick by the hot sun and was quite odorless. To enter the huts, I had to bend nearly double. There were no windows except thin slits in the wall and the interiors were dark, but cool and comfortable. Because the Masai were subject to occasional retalistory raids from other natives, they constructed their homes in this manner to escape notice. The buildings seemed crude, but they were easy to heat during the night and pleasantly cool in the day.

After we had rested I went out to see the bodies of the cattle that had been killed. The Masai had removed most of the meat. This was unfortunate, for a lion's own kill makes a perfect bait; he will almost invariably return to the carcass to feed. The bodies of the two herdsmen killed by the lions had also been left out in the bush but it ese had already been devoured by lions and hyenas. The Masai rarely bury their dead, usually leaving the job to the scavengers that roam the plains.*

I trailed the lions and found they had entered a thick patch of sansevieria. They were evidently waiting in the undergrowth for night to fall so they could return to their kills. The Masai told me that when they drove their cattle into the kraal in the evening, they shouted to urge the herd along. The lions apparently recognized these shouts and came out soon after, knowing the coast would be clear.

I asked the men if they could drive their cattle to the kraal earlier this evening while I waited in ambush beside the dead heifer. The old men were greatly amused at this idea and remarked it should work—the same ambush had always worked when they were fighting the Nandi, another warlike people who occasionally attacked the Masai.

I took up my stand in some thick bush and waited for evening. Just as the sun was setting I heard the high-pitched, unmusical cries of the herdsmen as they drove the cattle in from pasture. While I was still batening to the fading sounds, I suddenly saw three maned lions sitting dog fashion on their haunches with their cars cocked as they also betened to the faint yells. When the cries died away the lions rose and trotted toward me in single file. I waited for them to come within gunshot. Snifting the air, they came straight toward me. It seemed to take years while I gradually lifted my body enough to bring the rifle into position. I turned over the safety catch with my thumb and aimed at the leader. At the shot he dropped as though poleaxed. The others leaped back but did not run. Wild animals that have never heard firearms before are not particularly alarmed by the noise, apparently thinking it is thunder. I fired at the next lion and hit him in the shoulder. He spun around in a circle, roaring with rage; the third hon instantly sprang on him and they began to fight.

I fired again and hit this animal in the shoulder. He reared like a bucking horse, and while he was still on his hind legs I fired again into his neck. He dropped. The second hon was now also dead, whether from the effects of my bullet or the mauling he had taken trom his friend I cannot say.

Two wives for the night

N the distance I could hear the whoops and yells of the Masai who had heard my shots. They came pouring through the bush, and when they found all three animals lying stretched out in front of me, they went mad with delight.

When the time came to reture, I was ushered into the largest of the huts. In one of the compartments was a bed made of soft rushes and covered with bullock skins. The chief's two buxom young wives entered with me and obviously intended to share the bed. I wondered where the chief would spend the night, since there was clearly not enough room for him too. However it turned out that he was staying with some friends, so as not to interfere with any plans I might have for the evening. The girls clad in Eve's attire except for thin strings of beads around their waistlines, remained at the end of the hut. They lay quietly and said nothing for, according to ancient custom, the male has to make the advances. I was tired after my long trek and soon fell into a heavy sleep.

In the next few weeks I killed more than 50 lions. Then, one evening while I was out alone, I became lost in the tangle of spurs and ravines that laced the footbills. I tried to backtrack, but before I reached camp night came on and I could no longer follow my trail. A storm had been brewing during the late afternoon and now it broke over the distant ridges. For a while I could guide myself by the flashes of lightning, for I knew the approximate position of the storm in relation to the mountains. But by midnight the storm had blown away and I could only go on blindly through the darkness. Then I heard the distant tinkle of cowbells in a kraal—a lovely sound to me at that moment. I headed toward the noise, shouting as I went. In a few minutes my shouts were answered. A light appeared and I saw ahead a small Masai cow-dung hut with the usual thornbush kraal nearby, The Masai couple took me in and promptly started a fire in the tiny hut.

*I remember another occasion in the Masai Reserve when I sat up all night by a fine zehra bait, hoping to get a hon or two. I had no luck, even though during the night I could hear hons grunting and the giggling sounds hyenas make while devouring something they like particularly. The bait was not touched. I had thought it particularly attractive to hons and hyenas. But I had something to learn: Masai natives laid my fadore to an elderly Masai lady who had died the previous evening. It was she upon whom the animals had been feeding. Maybe in her youth the departed had been a graceful, dainty damsel for whom the Masai yied. Now the beasts of the wild preferred her to a fat, juicy zebra.

The man was in his early 40s, too old to be considered a moran, and so, from the Masai point of view, already started on the down-hill grade that would finally lead to his being left out for the lions. He had heard about my exploits as a lion killer and eagerly asked me questions about my gun and how many animals I had killed. I found that his name was Kirakangano and that his father had been killed by a rhino years before. Kirakangano had developed a hatred for dangerous wild animals and had devoted his life to hunting them. He had no interest in anything but tracking big game through the tangled intricacies of the bush and then meeting the charge of some infuriated beast with his shield and spear. Here was a man who liked hunting as I did.

When I asked Kirakangano if he would like to accompany me as a guide, he rose, took up his spear and shield, and asked when we were leaving.

He became my right hand. He was a magnificent tracker and absolutely fearless, and I relied on him as I did on myself. He had the knack of thinking in the same manner that an animal does, thus often foreseeing the quarry's next move and preparing for it.

The day he really proved his mettle was when we tracked down a wounded lioness. For a

It was deathly quiet in the thicket. Not so much as the chirp of a bird could be heard. I knew we must be close to the wounded honess and at any moment she might burst out of the cover on top of us.

The dogs were growing increasingly restless. I told them to go ahead. They sprang forward. Almost at once a din of savage snarls and growls broke out directly in front of us. Kirakangano and I forced our way through the bushes to reach them. We had hardly taken a dozen steps in the high grass when we came on a rounded lair streaked with dried blood. Here the lioness had been resting. Beside the lair two of my brave airedales were lying dead, their mouths and eyes still open. They had burst in on her and taken the brunt of her attack. Kirakangano and I owed our lives to the dogs, for the lioness was so cunningly concealed we would never have seen her in time.

The other dogs were still fighting with her and we could hear them racing through the brush, stopping to bark frantically when she turned at bay. We hurried toward the sound. The Masai was carrying his spear at the ready, the long shaft beautifully balanced between thumb and forefinger.

One of the collies came limping back to me, terribly torn. I saw nothing could be done for the poor brute and shot him quickly. At the sound of my shot the wounded lioness suddenly leaped up from a tuft of dead grass a few feet away. At the same instant a second lioness broke from the cover on my right and charged us.

There was no time to think. Both the cats were nearly on us, each coming from a different direction. I fired at the second lioness because she seemed more determined. The bullet hit her half an inch over the left eye. At the same moment I saw Kirakangano plunge his spear into the body of the wounded animal beside us. She turned fiercely, grabbing the spear shaft with her teeth, and tried to pull it out of her body. Kirakangano started to draw his double-bladed knife from his belt, but before he could get the knife free I finished her with a shot in the neck.

Kirakangano and I silently shook hands. Without him, one or the other of the two honesses would surely have gotten us.

My time on the Masai Reserve was beginning to run out. I had up to now shot 70 lions and still the tribe had cause for complaint. So I decided to try shooting from a thorn boma (blind) at night. This is hardly a sporting way of hunting, but I had come to the reserve on business.

I hitched a yoke of oxen to a zebra that I had shot and had them drag the bait several miles across the plains, finally leaving the carcass on the upwind side of a likely cover.

My porters cut brushwood and thorn branches, making a horseshoe-shaped boma where I intended to spend the night with Kirakangano.

When all was ready, Kirakangano and I took up our positions in the boma. I gave him a flashlight and showed him how to aim it at the bait when the time came to shoot. Kirakangano was fascinated by the flashlight and kept switching it on and off until I told him to stop.

Lion banquet

AS it grew dusk several hyenas slunk up to the bait, followed by two jackals. The jackals sat anxiously feasting their eyes on the zebra while the hyenas slunk back and forth to make sure all was clear. Finally one dashed in and grabbed the exposed entrails, dashing off with them and giving vent to slurping, wailing guffaws. The others now came closer and began to pull at the bait. Then I saw them rush off while the jackals approached confidently. That meant lions were coming in. I laid my rifle in position and waited.

In a few minutes I heard the low and unmistakable breathing of lions behind the boma. They circled us and sprang on the zebra. I whispered to Kirakangano to switch on the light. To my astonishment, I heard him whisper "Taballo!" (Masai for "Wait!") I glanced over at him and saw that he was paralyzed with fear. The unaccustomed experience of shooting lions at night from a boma had completely unnerved this man who could run up to an infuriated lion in daylight with nothing but his spear.

I grabbed the light from his hand and flashed it through a small opening overlooking the bait. What a sight! There were at least 20 lions and lionesses a few yards in front of us. Two fine, blackmaned lions stood staring at the light, the essence of defiance, their manes and chests covered with blood and filth from the stomach contents of the zebra. By this time Kirakangano was literally shivering with terror, but I knew he would gain confidence as soon as the shooting began. Wedging the light between two thorn branches so it shone on the scene, I slipped my rifle barrel through a hole in the brush and fired at what seemed to be the larger of the two males.

A chorus of grunts and savage growls went up from the pride, I fired again and again. The animals had retreated beyond the range of the light so I stopped to reload. Kirakangano was beginning to recover from his funk, and I gave him a piece of tobacco to chew on. Masai love the weed. The sting of the tobacco seemed to restore him somewhat and the sight of the three dead lions was more than any Masai could regard indifferently.

The pride now began to return. Kırakangano grabbed the light and began to shine it from one hon to another, moving so rapidly in his excitement that I had scarcely time to aim. A hon dropped at every report of my gun. The lions paid no attention to the shots. They would turn to sniff a dead friend fallen beside them, and then go on with their feeding.

Ten lions now lay dead around the zebra. Then, for some reason, a fine, black-maned lion came sneaking around our boma from the side. He stood there, giving vent to rare, bloodcurdling roars. The ground seemed to quiver with the reverberations. This outburst alarmed the rest of the pride, and they slowly withdrew, the old male following them.

I had no intention of allowing these fine hides to be torn to pieces by scavenger hyenas. When I was sure the lions had departed, I told Kirakangano to hold the light on the scene while I went out and pulled the dead animals closer to the boma. The Masai had now lost all his fear. I left the boma and started toward the dead lions. I had almost reached them when the light suddenly went out.

Calling to Kirakangano to turn it on again, I took another few steps forward. Suddenly I stumbled over the supple, hot body of a hon and fell on top of him. He gave a low grunt; he was still alive. I flung myself clear and raced for the boma. I expected every second to feel the hon on my back, but I reached the doorway and bolted inside. There was Kirakangano sitting with the pieces of the flashlight laid around him. He had become curious to see how the strange thing worked and had taken it apart while I was out in the darkness stumbling over wounded lions.

I spoke to him pretty roundly and he apologized. I reassembled the flashlight and put another bullet in the lion to make sure he was properly dead. Then we settled down to wait. During the night two more prides came to the bait. When dawn broke 18 lions lay dead before me. After the noise and turmoil of the night, the scene looked strangely peaceful. Nothing was moving except hon flies doing their creepy, jumpy antics. Taking care that there were no wounded lions about, Kirakangano and I left the boma and went out to stand over the dead animals.

I must own that I felt regrets. Yet I knew these animals had to die or the Masai would have continued to suffer their depredations. An artificial condition had created the surplus of lions and it could only have been corrected by artificial means. Whatever the means, Kirakangano and I stood there on the plain confronted by a sight that I doubt anyone had ever seen before—or will ever see again.

Since then I have done a lot of hunting. I hold the world's record for rhino and I have shot more than 1,400 elephants. We didn't keep records on lions, especially in those early days, but I'm pretty certain I have shot as many (about 600) as any other man. I certainly do not tell of these records with pride. Some of my hunting was done as a sportsman. But most of it, like that night kill on the Masai Reserve, was work that had to be done, and I happened to be the man who did it. Over the years I have acquired an enormous respect and admiration for the big animals of the African plains. I studied them because I was honestly interested in them. It may sound strange to the armchair conversationalist, but I mean it when I say that I had a deep affection for the animals I had to kill.

HUGE TROPHIES, a pair of elephant tusks weighing a total of 294 pounds, are held up by Author Hunter. Because of the slaughter by sportsmen and ivory hunters, few elephants live long enough to grow tusks this size any more.

HIS FREE BOUQUETS BRIGHTEN UP FERRY RIDES

For 40 years Charles Bang has been riding the Staten Island ferry. Nearly every day he has gotten aboard with an armful of flowers and walked around giving the passengers cornflowers, lilies or whatever is in season.

Mr. Bang, 77 and a widower, grows the flowers behind his Staten Island home. He gets up at 6:30 each morning to cut them, selecting blooms at their peak. "I wouldn't think of giving away flowers that are going to die soon," he says. New passengers, getting flowers for the first time, are apt to shy away, suspecting a gag or a touch. But veterans, who call-Mr. Bang Uncle Charlie, regard his little floral gifts as part of a ferry rider's life. Mr. Bang disposes of most of his flowers on the ferry but saves a few to give to friends at the Fulton fish market as he walks through on the way to the cluttered salvage warehouse where he sells oddments like white squill, old shellae, seashells.

AND THEN THERE WERE 55

At 11:16 a.m., July 2, there were 56 bright, new and identical prefab houses in neat rows in the Bemerton Heath housing development near Salisbury, England. Inside one, which had two high-tension poles on its large lot, Mrs. Samson Pritchard lay happily watching a visiting nurse give her week-old daughter a bath. Suddenly a crippled RAF dive bomber roared down from the sky, struck the high-tension wires and bounced away, spraying burning gasoline. The quick-witted nurse in the Pritchard house handed the baby through a window, then helped carry the mother out just as flames engulfed the house. By noon, July 2, there were 55 prefabs in Bemerton Heath (above) plus the stone chimney of the 56th.

Why is Schlitz so satisfying?

Because the folks who make it are not easily satisfied. They want a clean, bright taste, and stand-up character with just the kiss of the hops, and a texture with personality.

It is this sympathetic way with the sensitive ingredients of beer—the "Gold Thumb," some people call it—that has won so many friends for Schlitz. Today, more people prefer (and buy) Schlitz than any other beer.
